INTRODUCTION

This outline introduces records and strategies that can help you discover your Irish ancestors. It teaches terms associated with Irish genealogy and describes the contents, uses, and availability of major genealogical records. Use this outline to set meaningful research goals and to select the records which will help you achieve them.

Usually, you will need to know the specific parish or town in Ireland where your ancestor was born before beginning your Irish research. Tips for finding your ancestor's place of origin are in the "Ireland Search Strategies" section of this outline.

You will also need some basic understanding of genealogical research procedures before you begin to look for your ancestors. To help you understand the basics, the booklet, Guide to Research, are available at the Family History Library and at Family History Centers.

Using This Outline

Since several factors can affect your choice of records to search, this outline will help you evaluate the contents, reliability, availability, ease of use, time period covered, and the likelihood that your ancestor will be listed in these records.

The "Ireland Search Strategies" section explains the basic steps to follow to effectively research your Irish family history. This section is particularly valuable if you are just beginning your research.

The "Records Selection Table: Ireland" helps you select records to search. The section "Records at the Family History Library" describes the library's Irish collection. The "Family History Library Catalog" section explains how to use the catalog to find specific records in the library's collection.

This outline discusses in alphabetical order the major records used in Irish research. The records are discussed in this outline under the same subject headings they appear under in the Family History Library Catalog. For example, you will find Tithe Applotment books discussed in this outline under the heading "Taxation," and you will find the library's holdings of Tithe Applotment records listed in the Family History Library Catalog under the same heading.

Related records and concepts are discussed under the same outline heading. For example, parish registers, marriage licenses, and vestry minutes are discussed under the heading "Church Records."

This outline discusses many but not all sources of Irish genealogical information. At the end of the outline, in the section entitled "Other Records for Ireland," you will find a brief list of additional Family History Library Catalog headings under which you can find Irish genealogical information. In the “For Further Reading” section you will find a short bibliography of other sources on Irish research.

IRELAND SEARCH STRATEGIES

Step 1. Identify What You Know about Your Family

Begin your research with family and home sources. Look for names, dates, and places in certificates, family Bibles, letters, obituaries, diaries, tombstones, and similar sources. Ask your relatives for information they may have. It is possible that your second cousin, great-aunt, or other relative already has some family information. Organize the information you find and record it on pedigree charts and family group record forms.

Step 2. Decide What You Want to Learn

Select a specific relative or ancestor born in Ireland for whom you know at least a name, the town or parish where he or she lived in Ireland, and an approximate date when he or she lived there. Additional information, such as your ancestor's religion and the names of other family members, will also be helpful.

If you do not have enough information on your Irish ancestor, review the sources mentioned in step one that may give your ancestor's birth date and birthplace or date and place of residence. See also the “Records Selection Table: Ireland” or the Tracing Immigrant Origins Research Outline for more suggestions on how to find this information.

Next, decide what you want to learn about your ancestor, such as parents' names or marriage date and place. You may want to ask an experienced researcher or a librarian to help you select a goal that you can achieve.

Step 3. Select a Record to Search

Effective researchers first search for background information. Next they survey compiled records. Then they search original documents.

Background Information Sources. Learning about the geography and history of Ireland will save you time and effort by helping you understand the circumstances that influenced both the lives of your ancestors and the records written about them. In studying the history of Ireland, for example, you will learn that there was a civil war in Ireland in 1921 and 1922 that caused the creation of the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland.

To gain necessary background information, do the following:

- Learn about parishes or townlands of your ancestor's residence. Examine maps, gazetteers, particularly townland indexes, and other place-finding aids to learn as much as you can about each of the places where your ancestor lived. Record the names of governmental and ecclesiastical jurisdictions; nearby parishes, cities, and counties; and other geographical features. See the "Gazetteers" and "Maps" sections of this outline for more specific sources that can help you find this information.
- Review histories. Study a history of the specific area where your ancestor lived. Look for clues about the people, places, religions, and events that may have affected your ancestor and his or her records. For example, you may read that French Huguenots immigrated to Ireland and settled in a particular county. If your ancestor was a Huguenot, this would suggest that you might find your ancestor in that county. Sources that you can read to learn of such migrations, settlement patterns, government jurisdictions, and historical events are described in the "Church History," "Gazetteers," and "History" sections of this outline.
- Learn about Irish jurisdictions. You will need to know about Irish civil and ecclesiastical boundaries. A brief overview of Irish jurisdictions can be found in "Historical and Administrative Divisions of Ireland," in Donal F. Begley, ed., Irish Genealogy: A Record Finder (see "For Further Reading"). For more information about Irish jurisdictions, see the "Gazetteers" section of this outline.

Previous Research Sources. Check for research done previously by others. This can save you time and reveal valuable information. Consult:

- Printed family histories and genealogies.
- The International Genealogical Index.
- Ancestral File.
- The Family Group Records Collections.
- Biographies.
- Compiled Irish pedigrees.
- Family history societies' lists of members' interests.

Records containing previous research are described in the "Biography" and "Genealogy" sections of this outline. Remember, information in previous research sources may contain some inaccuracies. Verify it by checking original documents when possible.

Original Records. After surveying previous research, you will be ready to search original documents. Many of these documents have been copied on microfilm or microfiche. Original documents can provide dependable, firsthand information recorded at or near the time of an event. To do thorough research in original documents, you should search records of:

- Your ancestor's church in each place he or she lived.
- The jurisdictions that may have kept records about your ancestor (parish, city, county, and country).

This outline will describe many types of original documents. Most Irish researchers, however, begin with the following types of records:

- Civil registration
- Church records
- Land records
- Probate records

Step 4. Find and Search the Record

Suggestions for Obtaining Records. You may be able to obtain the records you need through the following places:

- Family History Library. You are welcome to use the records at the Family History Library. The library is open to the public, and there are no fees for using the records. If you would like more information about the library's services, write to the following address:

Family History Library
35 North West Temple
Salt Lake City, UT 84150-3400
USA

- Family History Centers. Copies of most of the microform records at the Family History Library can be loaned to more than eighteen hundred Family History Centers worldwide. Small duplication and postage fees are charged for this service. The library cannot lend its books to the centers, but copies of many books not protected by copyright are available on microfilm or microfiche.

To get a list of the Family History Centers near you, write to the Family History Library.

- Archives and churches. Archives hold many original documents, such as land and estate records. Archives also hold copies of many parish records. Original parish records, however, are usually in the custody of local ministers. For more information on repositories, see the “Archives and Libraries” section of this outline.
- Libraries and interlibrary loan. Public, academic, and other research libraries may have sources for Irish research. Many of these libraries provide interlibrary loan services. The Family History Library, however, does not participate in the interlibrary loan system.
- Professional researchers. You may employ a professional researcher to search for information on your ancestors. Some researchers specialize in Irish records. Lists of qualified, professional researchers are available from the Family History Library. In addition, a list of members of the Association of Professional Genealogists in Ireland (APGI) can be requested from:

Honorary Secretary of APGI
c/o The Genealogical Office
2 Kildare Street
Dublin 2
IRELAND (EIRE)

Irish archives (see the "Archives and Libraries" section of this outline) may also provide names of individuals who can search the archive's records for you.

For more information on employing a professional researcher, see the Family History Library handout Hiring a Professional Genealogist.

- Photocopies. The Family History Library and some other libraries offer limited photoduplication services for a small fee. You must specify the source and the exact pages you need. Books protected by copyright cannot be copied in their entirety. However, a few pages can usually be copied for personal research. The library does not copy large portions of a microfilm. To obtain a copy of a large portion of a microfilmed record, write to the archive where the original record is stored.

When requesting services from libraries or professional researchers, you will be more successful if your letter is as concise as possible and makes a specific request. Include a self-addressed, stamped, long envelope when writing within your own country. When you write to a foreign country for information, enclose three international reply coupons (available from your post office).

Know the fees that will be charged for any service by agents or archives before authorizing them to perform the service. You will usually need to send money before you receive photocopy or search services. Use international money orders rather than personal checks to send payments to another country.

Finally, request a complete copy, whether handwritten or photocopied, of the record you need.

Suggestions for Searching the Records. Follow these principles as you search the records for your ancestor:

- Search for one generation at a time. Search backward from your chosen ancestor one generation at a time, proving parentage. Do not skip back a generation or more and assume that a person is related to your ancestor just because they share the same surname. It is much easier to prove parentage than it is to prove descent.
- Search for the ancestor's entire family. Look for clues that hint of other family members. For example, in most families children were born at regular intervals. Therefore, if you note a long period between two children's birth dates, reexamine the records to search for a child you may have overlooked. Also, consider looking at other records and in other localities to find missing family members.
- Search each source thoroughly. A small piece of information in a record may be the clue you need to find a person or to trace a family line farther, so thoroughly examine each record you search. Note, for example, the occupation and address of your ancestor. Also note the names and any other information given about witnesses, sponsors, neighbors, relatives, guardians, and others.

- Examine a copy of the original record. In some cases, transcripts of the original records are available. While transcripts may be easier to read, they may be less accurate than the original records.
- Search a broad time period. Dates found in some sources may be inaccurate. Look several years before and after the date you think an event occurred. A christening or baptism could have taken place anytime during a person's life.
- Look for indexes. Look for an index that covers the record type, time period, and place you need. Surname indexes exist for many records, including civil registration, probate, and land records. Make sure you check the original records after consulting an index. The original may contain additional information.
- Watch for name variations. The history of Ireland contributed to many variations in Irish names. Consequently, names are often recorded differently than you might expect. Be flexible when searching for your names of interest. For more information on name variations, see the "Names, Personal" section of this outline.

Step 5. Use the Information

Evaluate the Information You Find. Carefully evaluate whether the information you find is complete and accurate. Ask yourself the following questions:

- Did the person who provided the information witness the event?
- Was the information recorded near the time of the event?
- Is the information logical and consistent with the information in other sources?

If the answer to any of these questions is no, be cautious in accepting the information's accuracy. You may want to verify the information by doing further research. As you evaluate and verify, look for new information such as places, events, dates, and names which may suggest other records to search.

Record Your Searches and Findings. Copy the information you find and keep detailed notes about each record you search. Include in your notes the record's author, title, location, call numbers, and description as well as the objective and result of your search in that record.

Share Your Information with Others. Sharing the results of your research with family members and others can be very rewarding. Consider compiling your family history and sending copies of it to family members, to the Family History Library, and to other archives. The information you share may help family members remember more information and provide you with clues for continuing your research. Sharing through libraries, archives, and societies may bring you into contact with others who are researching the same family lines. See the "Genealogy" section of this outline for more information about coordinating your research with others. See Contributing Information to Ancestral File, available at the Family History Library and through Family History Centers, for information about contributing the results of your research to Ancestral File.

If you are a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, be sure to submit information about your deceased family members to the temple so that you can provide temple ordinances for them. Your ward family history consultant or a library staff member can assist you in this effort.

RECORDS AT THE FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY

Microform Records

The Family History Library has more than 11,500 microfilms and 3,000 microfiche containing information about people who have lived in Ireland. Most of the library's records have been obtained through an extensive microfilming program. The library's collection includes:

- Church baptism, marriage, and burial records.
- Deeds and tax records.
- Census records.
- Probate records.
- Estate records.
- Compiled family histories, pedigrees, and biographies.
- School records.
- Occupational records.
- Military records.

While the library has records from all over Ireland, it does not have records for every time period or locality in Ireland. For example, the library has few church records from County Cork.

Printed Records

The library has over 3,500 volumes of books, periodicals, and other printed materials helpful for Irish research. Copies of some of these publications are available on microfilm. These publications may include:

- Archive and library inventories and guides.
- Atlases and maps.
- Church record transcripts.
- Compiled genealogies.
- Directories.
- Family histories.
- Gazetteers.
- Handbooks and manuals.
- Histories (national, county, and local).
- Probate indexes.

- Societies' journals, newsletters, and other publications.

FAMILYSEARCH™

FamilySearch™ is a powerful computer system that helps to simplify family history work. The FamilySearch system includes computer files of family history information. The files are gathered from many different sources, and more files will be added in the future.

Once a person using FamilySearch™ selects a file and types in a name, the computer will search the selected file to find any names that match. The computer even matches last names that are spelled differently but sound the same. It can guide users from the matches they find to full screens of information, including dates and places of birth, marriage, and death and names of parents, children, and spouses.

FamilySearch™ is available at the Family History Library in Salt Lake City; at hundreds of Family History Centers; and at some public and private libraries in the United States, Canada, and a number of other countries.

The FamilySearch™ files useful for Irish research include:

- Ancestral File. Ancestral File contains family history information gathered from family group sheets and pedigrees that have been contributed since 1979. The file already contains millions of names. You may contribute your family history information to Ancestral File. For more information, see the library publication Contributing Information to Ancestral File, available at the Family History Library and through Family History Centers.
- Family History Library Catalog. The Family History Library Catalog on FamilySearch™ is an automated edition of the Family History Library's catalog. The automated edition simplifies use of the catalog. It allows you to quickly find information, including library call numbers, on sources held by the library.
- International Genealogical Index. The International Genealogical Index provides the names and vital information—including birth, christening, or marriage dates—of more than 1.4 million deceased people who lived in Ireland. The index includes names extracted by volunteers from parish registers and civil registrations and names submitted by other researchers.
- Social Security Death Index. The Social Security Death Index lists all the people in the United States who held social security numbers and who died between 1962 and the present. The index can lead to other social security records which may provide your ancestor's birthplace in Ireland.

Other files will be added to FamilySearch™ as they become available.

THE FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY CATALOG

The key to finding a record in the Family History Library is the Family History Library Catalog. The catalog describes and provides call numbers for each of the library's holdings. The catalog is available on microfiche and on compact disc at the Family History Library and at Family History Centers.

The Family History Library Catalog on microfiche is divided into four major sections:

- Locality
- Surname
- Subject
- Author/Title

The Family History Library Catalog on compact disc has four types of searches:

- Locality Search
- Surname Search
- Film Number Search
- Computer Number Search

To find the call numbers of the records described in this outline, you will most often use the Locality Search on microfiche or compact disc. As mentioned, the section headings in this outline, such as “Church Records,” are the same as the subjects you would search in the microfiche edition and as the topics you would type into the computer in the compact disc edition of the Family History Library Catalog.

The Locality Search list records by the area they cover and according to their record type or subject.

To find sources in the Locality section of the catalog, you would look for:

- The place your ancestor lived, such as:

  GREAT BRITAIN (kingdom)IRELAND (country)IRELAND, CLARE (country, county)IRELAND, CLARE, QUIN (country, county, parish)

- Then the record type you want, such as:

  GREAT BRITAIN - MILITARY RECORDSIRELAND - CENSUSIRELAND, CLARE - GENEALOGYIRELAND, CLARE, QUIN - CHURCH RECORDS

The record type (or subject) may be further subdivided, for example:

[LOCALITY] - GENEALOGY - HANDBOOKS AND MANUALS[LOCALITY] - CENSUS - 1901 - INDEXES

The localities in the catalog are based on the county structure as it existed in 1871 and as it is recorded in the 1871 census Alphabetical Index to the Townlands and Towns of Ireland. For more information about place-names, see the "Gazetteers" and "Maps" sections of this outline.

If you need more information about using the Family History Library Catalog, a short video program, written instructions, and reference librarians are available to assist you at the Family History Library and at Family History Centers.

To find Irish records or other sources not separately listed in the Family History Library Catalog, use Smith's Inventory of Genealogical Sources: Ireland. This includes a subject index to items that are not listed individually in the catalog but which are found in periodicals, books, and films in the library's collection. The index is available in manuscript form at the Family History Library (FHL Call No. 941.5 D23s 30 volumes) and on microfiche (FHL microfiche 6110527).

Records Selection Table: Ireland

RECORDS SELECTION TABLE: IRELAND

The table below can help you decide which type of Irish records to search. Similar types of records in the country to which your ancestor immigrated may provide the information you need.Column 1 lists the types of information you may need.Column 2 lists the sections of this outline that discuss the records that are most likely to have the information you need.Column 3 lists other sections that may be useful.The section headings used in columns 2 and 3 are the same headings as those used in the Locality Search of the Family History Library Catalog.Records containing previous research (biography, genealogy, history, nobility, periodicals, and societies) may be helpful for most types of information. These have not been repeatedly listed unless they are especially helpful for the information you need.

ARCHIVES AND LIBRARIES

Archives collect and preserve public records and historical documents. Libraries collect mostly published sources, such as books, maps, and microfilm. This section describes the archives, libraries, and other centers that serve as Ireland's major repositories of genealogical and historical sources.

If you plan to visit one of the repositories discussed, write and ask about its collections, hours, services, and fees a few months in advance. Also ask if a reader's ticket (a paper indicating you are a responsible researcher) is required to view the records, and ask how to obtain one.

Remember the Family History Library may have printed or microfilmed copies of the records you need, so check its holdings before you go abroad.

English Repositories

Because England ruled Ireland for much of its history, many records pertaining to the Irish are found in English repositories. The major English archives that have Irish records are:

Public Record Office
Ruskin Avenue, Kew
Richmond, Surrey TW9 4DU
ENGLAND

British Library, Department of Western Manuscripts
Great Russell Street
London WCIB 3DG
ENGLAND

British Library, India Office Library and Records
197 Blackfriars Road
London SEI 8NG
ENGLAND

British Library, Newspaper Library
Colindale Avenue
London NW9 5HE
ENGLAND

Records dealing with the Irish may be found in other English archives as well (see the England Research Outline).

Irish Repositories

Ireland has five major types of repositories that contain genealogical information:

- National archives and libraries
- Public libraries and museums
- Religious archives
- Heritage or genealogical centres
- Other archives

National Archives and Libraries

The National Archives and the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland. Both the National Archives and the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland collect records for all of Ireland. Neither staff does major research for patrons, but both may conduct brief searches if you supply them with sufficient information.

The National Archives contains records previously held by the Public Record Office at Four Courts, Dublin and by the State Paper Office in Dublin (neither of which exists today). Records at the National Archives include Church of Ireland parish records, gravestone inscriptions, census returns, probate records, deeds, Tithe Applotment books, rebellion and outrage papers, convict reference files, and other historical and genealogical sources. The address is:

National Archives
Bishop Street
IRELAND (EIRE)

The Public Record Office of Northern Ireland has a fairly complete collection of church records (all denominations) for all of Northern Ireland as well as some records for the counties of Donegal, Cavan, and Monaghan. The office's holdings also include estate papers, gravestone inscriptions, census records, Tithe Applotment books, valuation lists, and other historical and genealogical sources. The address is:
Public Record Office of Northern Ireland
66 Balmoral Avenue
Belfast BT9 6NY
NORTHERN IRELAND

National Library of Ireland. The National Library is Ireland's main repository of filmed Catholic parish registers. Other records on deposit at the National Library include newspapers, city and regional directories, estate records, the Householders Index, and Griffith's Primary Valuation. The library's staff does not do commissioned searches. The address is:
National Library of Ireland
Kildare Street
Dublin 2
IRELAND (EIRE)

Genealogical Office. The records of the Genealogical Office deal mainly with heraldry. The office's holdings include information extracted from records that were destroyed when the Public Record Office burned.

The records of the Genealogical Office are not available to the public. Some of the records, however, have been microfilmed and these films may be available at other repositories. The office does not do commissioned research. The office does provide a consultation service that gives detailed guidance, for a fee, to people who are doing research on their own families. For more information on the Genealogical Office, see the chapter by that name in John Grenham, Tracing Your Irish Ancestors: The Complete Guide (see "For Further Reading"). The address is:

Genealogical Office
2 Kildare Street
Dublin 2
IRELAND (EIRE)

Public Libraries and Museums

Each county and most major cities in Ireland have a main library. Many of these libraries have a local and family history collection. These collections may include estate records, newspapers, gravestone inscriptions, minute books of various local and county government agencies, poor law records, family pedigrees, and histories. Some libraries have indexed parts of their collections.

County or specialty museums may also contain genealogical records, including estate, military, tax, church, and business or employment records. For addresses of Irish libraries and museums, see Seamus Helferty and Raymond Refausse, eds., Directory of Irish Archives.

Religious Archives

Religious archives contain records of a particular denomination. Several Irish religious archives and their addresses are listed in the "Church Records" section of this outline.

Heritage or Genealogical Centres

Local heritage centres, sometimes called genealogical centres, are a recent development in Ireland. These centres are currently indexing church records, mainly Catholic parish registers. Some centres are also indexing Tithe Applotment books, Griffith's Primary Valuation, the 1901 census, and gravestone inscriptions. The centres are computerizing their indexes.

Centre records are not open to the public. Centre staff, however, will search their indexes and supply information for a fee. For more information about the heritage centres, see:

Directory of Parish Registers Indexed in Ireland. Naas, Ireland: Irish Family History Society, 1992. (FHL book Ref 941.5 K23d; computer number 0660299.) This work provides a county by county list of centres, including addresses, phone numbers, and descriptions of the records each centre has indexed.

Other Archives

Other archives also contain information of genealogical value. Three such archives are described below. Others are discussed in the books listed under General Guides below.

Linen Hall Library. The Linen Hall Library has an extensive collection of genealogical and heraldic material. Some of its holdings are duplicated in other repositories such as the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland, the National Library of Ireland, and the National Archives. Others of its holdings, such as its printed family histories, are unique. The address is:

Linen Hall Library
17 Donegall Square North
Belfast BT1 5GD
NORTHERN IRELAND

Trinity College Library. Among other genealogical and historical records, the Manuscripts Department of Trinity College Library has a collection of medieval manuscripts, the 1798 rebellion papers, and some Church of Ireland parish records for Dublin. The address is:
Trinity College Library
College Street
Dublin 2
IRELAND (EIRE)

Valuation Office. The Valuation Office holds the Griffith's Primary Valuation records and accompanying maps (see the "Taxation" section of this outline). The office's post-1868 valuation records and maps are of the Republic of Ireland only. The address is:
Valuation Office
6 Ely Place
Dublin 2
IRELAND (EIRE)

General Guides

Guides to archives and libraries in Ireland and Northern Ireland include:

Foster, Janet, and Julia Sheppard. British Archives: A Guide to Archive Resources in the United Kingdom. 3rd ed. New York: Macmillan Publishers, 1995. (FHL book Ref 942 J54f 1995; microfilm number 763911.) This guide lists the addresses, major records, and publications of several repositories in Northern Ireland. The guide is indexed by county and by type of collection.

Grenham, John. “Research Services, Societies and Repositories.” In Tracing Your Irish Ancestors: The Complete Guide. (See “For Further Reading.”) This chapter lists the names, addresses, phone numbers, and hours of various repositories in both the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland.

Helferty, Seamus, and Raymond Refausse, eds. Directory of Irish Archives. 2nd ed. Blackrock, Ireland: Irish Academic Press, 1993, (FHL book Ref 941.5 A34h, 1993; computer number 0705881.) This book alphabetically lists for both the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland each repository, its address, its major record holdings, and any guides to its collections. The book is indexed by county and by record subject.

Inventories, Registers, Catalogs

Many archives have inventories, registers, catalogs, guides, directories, or periodicals that describe the archive's records and how to use them. If possible, study these guides before visiting an archive so that you can use your time there more effectively.

Some indexes to holdings in Irish archives are:

Hayes, Richard J. Manuscript Sources for the History of Irish Civilisation. 11 vols. Boston: G. K. Hall & Co., 1965. (FHL book Ref Q 941.5 A5h; film 1,440,939-43; computer number 0011171.)

Hayes, Richard J. Sources for the History of Irish Civilisation: Articles in Irish Periodicals. 9 vols. Boston: G. K. Hall and Co., 1970. (FHL book Ref Q 941.5 A5ha; film 973,222-30; computer number 0167329.)

Hayes, Richard J. Manuscript Sources for the History of Irish Civilisation: First Supplement, 1965-1975. 3 vols. Boston: G. K. Hall & Co., 1979. (FHL book Ref Q 941.5 A5h 1st supp; computer number 0011333.)

These volumes index manuscripts, periodicals, and major collections of Irish interest deposited at the National Library before 1975. They also index many records in other repositories, public and private, in Ireland, Britain, and elsewhere. The indexes are arranged by person, subject, place, date, and manuscript. Throughout the rest of this outline, these volumes will be referred to as Hayes's Sources.

A growing microfiche collection of guides and finding aids (including many unpublished finding aids) for various Irish archives, libraries, and museums is:

National Inventory of Documentary Sources in the United Kingdom and Ireland. Cambridge: Chadwyck-Healey, 1986-87. This inventory gives a description and the exact reference numbers of the collections in many repositories throughout Ireland. The inventory can thus help in locating documents that pertain to your research. The Family History Library's copy of the inventory is listed in the Author/Title Search of the microfiche catalog under NATIONAL INVENTORY OF DOCUMENTARY SOURCES IN THE UNITED KINGDOM AND IRELAND.

A name and subject index to the National Inventory is on microfiche (London: Chadwyck-Healey, 1995-; FHL fiche 6341118). This index includes a list of finding aids and an alphabetical list of repositories.

Additional archive and library inventories, guides, catalogs, and other finding aids available at the Family History Library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

BIOGRAPHY

A biography is a history of a person's life. In a biography, you may find the individual's birth, marriage, and death information as well as information about parents, spouse, children, and other family members. Verify information from biographies because it may be inaccurate.

You can locate individual or family biographies in the Surname Search of the catalog under the surname you are looking for. For information on biographies of royalty, nobility, and those with coats of arms, see the “Nobility” section of this outline.

Two sources listing published biographies are:

Grenham, John. “Family Histories.” In Tracing Your Irish Ancestors: The Complete Guide. (See “For Further Reading.”)

MacLysaght, Edward. Bibliography of Irish Family History. 2d ed. Blackrock, Ireland: Irish Academic Press, 1982. (FHL book 941.5 D23m; computer number 493660.)

Thousands of biographies have been gathered and published in collections that are sometimes called biographical encyclopedias or dictionaries. These usually only include biographies of well-known people. Some contain biographies of people belonging to specific groups, such as ministers, artists, scholars, or martyrs.

The following collections are important sources for biographies of prominent businessmen, political leaders, and religious and historical figures:

British and Irish Biographies. London: Chadwyck- Healey, 1986-. This is a major and still growing microfiche collection of biographical dictionaries. A large portion of the collection is indexed in Index to British and Irish Biographies, 1840-1940 ([Manchester: Chadwyck-Healey, 1987]; FHL fiche 6342001; computer number 0466588). The biographical dictionaries included in the collection, together with their Family History Library call numbers, are listed in the Author/Title Search of the microfiche catalog under BRITISH AND IRISH BIOGRAPHIES.

Crone, John S. A Concise Dictionary of Irish Biography. 1937. Reprint. Nendeln, Liechtenstein: Kraus Reprint, 1970. (FHL book Ref 941.5 D3cr 1970; computer number 0036018.) This dictionary contains short biographical summaries of famous Irishmen who lived between A.D. 350 and 1970.

Lee, Sir Sidney, et. al., eds. Dictionary of National Biography. 63 vols. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1885-. (FHL book Ref 920.042 D561n; fiche 6051261; computer number 0261150.) This series includes biographies of noteworthy British subjects who lived between a.d. 500 and 1985.

Sieveking, Paul, ed. The British Biographical Archive. New York, New York: K. G. Sauer, 1986. (FHL fiche 6029709-35, 6066966; computer number 0460188.) This collection contains biographies from 324 printed sources dating from 1600 to 1900.

If your ancestor played an important part in a group, occupation, or event, such as the clergy, painters, or the Boer Wars, search for biographical collections that may include your ancestor. Biographies available at the Family History Library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following localities and subject headings:

Localities	Subject Headings
GREAT BRITAIN	BIOGRAPHY

CEMETERIES

Gravestone inscriptions can be a useful source of family history information. Gravestones may give birth, marriage, and death information. They may also give clues about military service, occupation, or family members buried in the same area. Sometimes they give more information than the parish burial register or civil certificate of death. Gravestone inscriptions are especially helpful for identifying ancestors who are not recorded in other existing records.

To find an ancestor's gravestone inscription, you must know where he or she was buried. Your ancestor may have been buried in a church, city, or public cemetery usually near the place where he or she lived or died. You can find clues about burial place in church records, death certificates, probate records, newspapers, or family histories.

If your ancestor was buried in a churchyard, the parish minister of the church may have information about your ancestor in the church's burial registers or burial plot records. For help in finding a minister's address, see the “Church Directories” section of this outline.

Some gravestone inscriptions have been transcribed by Ireland's county heritage centres. Contact the centre in the county where your ancestor was buried for more information.

Gravestone inscriptions that have been transcribed by other organizations or individuals are listed in:

- Catalogs and inventories of various repositories (see the “Archives and Libraries” section of this outline).
- Hayes's Sources.
- John Grenham, Tracing Your Irish Ancestors: The Complete Guide. (See the “For Further Reading” section.)

The Family History Library has a growing collection of transcriptions of gravestone inscriptions. To locate these, consult the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - CEMETERIESIRELAND, [COUNTY] - CEMETERIESIRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH] - CEMETERIES

Gravestone inscriptions may be found in printed histories and periodicals. Many such inscriptions are listed in Smith's Inventory of Genealogical Sources: Ireland. Other periodicals and histories that may contain gravestone inscriptions are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - PERIODICALSIRELAND, [COUNTY] - PERIODICALSIRELAND, [COUNTY] - HISTORYIRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH] - HISTORY

CENSUS

A census is a count and description of the population of an area. When available, census records can provide names, ages, occupations, marital statuses, birthplaces, and family members' relationships. Censuses can also provide clues that lead to other records. A census may list only selected people for a special reason (such as males between the ages of 16 and 45 for military purposes) or the whole population. The percentage of people listed depends on the purpose of the census and on how careful the enumerator was.

Various types of censuses have been taken by civil authorities to determine such things as:

- Makeup of the population.
- Religion of the population.
- Military readiness.

- Taxes for support of the state church (called tithes).
- Taxes for poor relief (called poor rates).
- The number and identities of eligible voters (recorded in poll books).

For information on these census types, see the “Military Records,” “Church Records,” “Land Records,” and “Taxation” sections of this outline. Poll books are not discussed in this outline but a few are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND, [COUNTY] - VOTING REGISTERSIRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH] - VOTING REGISTERS

Civil Censuses of the Population

Government censuses of the population are particularly valuable because they list nearly all the population at a given time. The Irish government took a census in 1813 (which no longer exists), then every ten years from 1821 through 1911. Due to the Irish Civil War of 1921-22, another census was not taken until 1926. The next census was taken in 1936. Starting in 1946, censuses were taken every five years through 1971. Since 1971, censuses have been taken every ten years.

Only parts of the early censuses survive. The censuses from 1821 through 1851 were mostly destroyed in the 1922 fire at the Public Record Office in Dublin. The censuses from 1861 through 1891 were destroyed by the government sometime after statistics had been compiled from them.

The 1901 census is the first complete census available for Ireland. The 1901 and 1911 censuses are available to the public, but all censuses taken since 1911 are not.

The 1821 to 1851 censuses are divided by county, barony, civil parish, and townland. The 1901 and 1911 censuses are divided by county, electoral division, and townland.

You will find the following information in the various censuses:

1821. The 1821 census lists—for every member of the household—name, age, occupation, and relationship to the head of the household. The census also records the acreage held by the head of the household and the number of stories the dwelling had.

1831. The 1831 census lists only the head of the household, the number of children and adults in the household, and the religion of each household member.

1841. The 1841 census lists—for every member of the household—name, age, sex, relationship to the head of the household, marital status (and if married, the number of years married), occupation, and birthplace.

1851. The 1851 census gives the same information as the 1841 census. In addition, it has two schedules that were filled out if applicable. One reported absent members of the household and provided the standard census information plus the current place of residence for each. The other listed members of the household who had died since the last census and recorded for each the cause and year of death, age at death, sex, relationship to the head of the household, and occupation.

1901. The 1901 census lists—for every member of the household—name, age, sex, relationship to the head of the household, religion, occupation, marital status, county of birth (except for foreign births, which give country only), whether the individual spoke Irish, and whether the individual could read or write.

1911. The 1911 census lists the same information as the 1901 census and adds for married women the number of years she had been married to her current husband, the number of children that had been born to them, and the number of their children who were still alive.

The Public Record Office of Northern Ireland has some census records for Northern Ireland. All other census records, including the surviving early fragments, are kept at the National Archives. For a more detailed list of surviving census returns, see:

Begley, Donal F., ed. Irish Genealogy: A Record Finder (see the "For Further Reading" section).

Ryan, James. Irish Records. (See the "For Further Reading" section).

The Family History Library has microfilm copies of the early census fragments, the 1901 census, and the 1911 census. These are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - CENSUSIRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH] - CENSUS

Searching Census Records

When searching government census records, remember that:

- Ages may be inaccurate.
- The name on the census may not be the same as the name recorded in church or vital records.
- Names may be spelled as they sound.
- Place-names may be misspelled.
- Individuals missing from a family may be listed elsewhere in the census.

Also remember to:

- Search indexes, when available, before using the actual census records.
- Search records of the surrounding area if a family is not listed at the anticipated address.

Religious Censuses

In addition to the official government censuses, religious censuses were taken at various times. For example, in 1766 the government required ministers of the Church of Ireland to compile a return of all heads of household in their parishes. The name of the head of household, the religion of each family, and the activities of Catholic clergy in the area were noted in this census. All the original returns were deposited in the Public Record Office, Dublin, and subsequently destroyed in 1922. Extensive transcripts survive for some areas and are deposited in local archives in Ireland. Copies of surviving transcripts are also available at the Family History Library.

Some ministers took censuses of their parish or congregation for their own purposes. These records are usually in the custody of local ministers. Copies of the records may have been deposited in an Irish archive as well.

Surviving religious census records and sometimes the repositories where they are located are listed in:

Begley, Donal F., ed. Irish Genealogy: A Record Finder (see the "For Further Reading" section).

Grenham, John. Tracing Your Irish Ancestors: The Complete Guide (see the "For Further Reading" section).

McCarthy, Tony. The Irish Roots Guide (see the "For Further Reading" section).

To determine which religious censuses are available at the Family History Library, consult the following sources:

Smith's Inventory of Genealogical Sources: Ireland. This source contains information about many published religious censuses, particularly those reprinted in periodicals and which may not appear in the Register of Ireland below.

Register of Ireland Census and Census Substitutes. Salt Lake City, Utah: Genealogical Society, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1985. (FHL book Reg 941.5 X23c; film 1,441,023 item 1.) This library reference contains a county by county list of the library's religious census returns with their call numbers.

Religious census returns available at the Family History Library are also listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND, [COUNTY] - CENSUSIRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH] - CENSUS

Census Indexes

Many of the surviving fragments of the early Irish censuses have been extracted and indexed, but little indexing has been done for the 1901 census. The 1901 census indexes that have been produced are for specific areas and are arranged by street or by individuals' names.

Surname Indexes. Surname indexes exist for some census localities. Surname indexes are listed in Smith's Inventory of Genealogical Sources: Ireland. They are also listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND, [COUNTY] - CENSUS - INDEXESIRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH] - CENSUS - INDEXES

Street Indexes. If you know the address of an ancestor who lived in a large city, street indexes can help you quickly find that ancestor's census records. Three volumes of street indexes for the 1901 census referencing streets in Dublin, Belfast, Cork, Limerick, Londonderry, and Waterford are available at the Family History Library under the following title:

Ireland 1901 Census Street Index. Typescript. 3 vols. Salt Lake City, Utah: Genealogical Department, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1982. (FHL book Ref 941.5 X22i; fiche 6035493-95; computer number 0134242.) These volumes can give you the microfilm number of the records where your street of interest appears. Street indexes do not exist for earlier Irish censuses.

The following sources may help you find an ancestor's address so that you can access the above street indexes:

- Old letters
- City, occupational, postal, or commercial directories
- Birth, marriage, or death certificates
- Church records of christening, marriage, and burial
- Land and property deeds
- Probate records
- Newspaper notices
- Tax records
- Voting registers or poll books

Census indexes can save you time. However, census indexes may be incorrect or incomplete. Therefore, if you believe your ancestor should be listed in a census area's index, but he or she is not, search the actual census anyway.

Census Substitutes

Census substitutes are records that, like censuses, provide lists of individuals living in a specific area. Census substitutes may give the occupation, religion, residence, age, and value of the property of the individuals they list.

Old Age Pension Records. Old age pension records were kept by the Irish government starting in 1909 for individuals who filed a claim for an old age pension. Anyone filing a claim had to provide proof of birth or age. In the early days of the program, many people filing claims had been born before civil registration began in 1864. Consequently, they had to find other proof of their birth or age. Church records of baptisms or christenings were hard to find or did not exist. The government decided to accept copies of the 1841 and 1851 census records of these individuals as proof of age. As a result, old age pension records preserve some of the information from the 1841 and 1851 censuses, which were largely destroyed in 1922.

Most of the surviving old age pension claims are for Northern Ireland and are filed at the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland. Some surviving claims for the Republic of Ireland are held at the National Archives. The Family History Library's copies of Irish old age pension records are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - CENSUS.

Tithe Applotment (taken 1823-38) and Griffith's Primary Valuation (taken 1848-64). Tithe Applotment books, Griffith's Primary Valuation records, and later land valuation records are valuable census substitutes, because they record the names of the owners or occupiers of the land. For more information on these census substitutes, see the “Taxation” section of this outline.

CHURCH DIRECTORIES

Church directories are useful for obtaining the names, addresses, and jurisdictions of Irish Catholic and Protestant clergy. Church directories may also list:

- The diocese to which a Catholic or Church of Ireland parish belongs.
- Church headquarters.
- Former church officials.
- Addresses of church schools or other church institutions.

Annual church directories for Ireland include:

Church of Ireland Directory 1994. Dublin: Universal Publishing Co., 1994. (FHL book Ref 941.5 K24ci 1994; computer number 0039236.)

Methodist Church in Ireland. Minutes of Conference. Belfast: The Universities Press, 1992. (FHL book 941.5 K2co 1992; computer number 0463281.)

The Presbyterian Church in Ireland. Directory and Statistics, 1993. Belfast: V. M. Jordan, 1993. (FHL book Ref 941.5 K24pr 1993; computer number 0725310.)

Tierney, Rev. Martin, ed. Irish Catholic Directory 1992. Dublin: Veritas Publications, 1991. (FHL book Ref 941.5 K24i 1992; computer number 0085725.)

Some church directories are indexed by parish or congregation. Others are indexed by diocese or conference. Church directories available at the Family History Library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - CHURCH DIRECTORIES.

CHURCH HISTORY

Effective research in church records requires some understanding of your ancestor's religion and the events that led to the creation of church records.

The following major events affected Irish church history and records. The “History” section of this outline mentions other important events in Irish history.

1537	King Henry VIII declared himself supreme head of a new church, the Church of England (Anglican).
1541	Henry VIII became King of Ireland.
1560	The Anglican church (Church of Ireland) became the state church of Ireland under Elizabeth I.
1605-09	The plantation of Ulster was started. Many Presbyterians from Scotland were sent to Ulster to displace Irish Catholics and to strengthen English rule.
1619	The earliest known Church of Ireland parish register (St. John, Dublin) was begun.
1634	A law was passed requiring that Church of Ireland registers be kept.
1637	Presbyterian worship was suppressed by the Church of Ireland.
mid-1600s	The Quaker, Congregationalist, and Baptist movements began. The Huguenot migrations to Ireland also began.
1674	The oldest known Presbyterian register (Antrim, County Antrim) was begun.
1695-1728	The Penal Laws against Catholics were in force. Catholic clergy were banished. The Catholic church was forbidden to keep parish registers and Catholics were deprived of the rights to own property, hold office, and vote.

1719	The Toleration Act was passed, protecting Protestant dissenters.
1726	Nonconforming Presbyterians separated from the main Presbyterian body to form the presbytery of Antrim.
1747	The Methodist movement began.
1750s	Some Catholic registers in urban parishes were begun. Many Church of Ireland registers were begun.
1772-95	Catholic Relief Acts gradually restored the rights taken away by the Penal Laws.
1782	An act was passed validating marriages performed by Presbyterian ministers.
1816	Methodists divided into two groups: Primitive Methodists and Wesleyan Methodists.
1819	The Presbyterian church began to require its ministers to keep records.
1829	Irish Catholics became free to practice Catholicism without legal persecutions. Many Catholic records were begun.
1869	The Church of Ireland ceased to be recognized as the state church.
1876	A law was passed requiring Church of Ireland registers to be stored in the Public Record Office, Dublin.
1878	The 1876 storage law was amended to allow Church of Ireland ministers with suitable storage facilities to retain their records. The Primitive Methodists and Wesleyan Methodists united.
1922	A separate record repository was established for Northern Ireland. The Public Record Office, Dublin, burned, destroying many Church of Ireland parish records and other documents.

By studying Ireland's religious history and the histories of particular denominations, you will learn of conditions that influenced your ancestor's life and the keeping of church records. To find sources on Irish church history, look in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

CHURCH RECORDS

Church records are an excellent source of names, dates, and places. In fact, church records are the primary source for pre-civil registration (pre-1864) Irish research.

Church records include records of births or christenings, marriages, and sometimes deaths or burials. These records were kept in registers, usually called parish registers. Church records may include other types of records such as religious census returns, emigration lists, and session or vestry minutes.

The following book contains information about the history and records of many Irish religious denominations:

Ryan, James G., ed. Irish Church Records. Glenageary, County Dublin, Ireland: Flyleaf Press, 1992. (FHL book Ref 941.5 K27rj; computer number 0695685.)

The following books also have excellent information about church records:

Falley, Margaret. Irish and Scotch-Irish Ancestral Research (see the "For Further Reading" section).

Church of Ireland Records

Historically, each parish in Ireland kept its own records. Because the Church of Ireland was the state or established church, these parish records were considered state records. In 1876 a law was passed requiring that Church of Ireland parish registers be sent to the Public Record Office in Dublin for safekeeping. This law was amended in 1878 to allow parishes with good storage facilities to retain their records, so not all parish records were sent to Dublin. Further, some ministers made copies of their records before sending the originals to Dublin. Thus, many Church of Ireland records remain, even though the records sent to Dublin were destroyed in 1922 when the Public Record Office burned.

Church of Ireland parish registers list christenings, marriages, and burials. The amount of information recorded varies from parish to parish and from minister to minister. Later records generally give more information than earlier ones. Because the Church of Ireland was the state church, even people who did not belong to the church were sometimes listed in the church's parish registers. Consequently, it is wise to search Church of Ireland records regardless of your ancestor's religion.

Christenings (Baptisms)

Children were usually christened (baptized) within a few weeks of birth, though some christenings of older children or adults are recorded. Parish registers provide at least the name of the person christened and the christening date. They usually record the name of the father and frequently the first name of the mother. They may also record birth date, legitimacy, father's occupation, and the family's place of residence. In larger cities, registers often provide the family's street address.

Marriages

Pre-1845 parish registers usually provide only the date of marriage and the names of the bride and groom. Beginning in 1845, parish registers also include the place of marriage; the marital status, occupation, and place of residence; both fathers' occupations; and the names of witnesses (possible relatives). If the father was deceased, that fact was sometimes noted.

Couples were usually married in the bride's parish. Permission to marry was obtained in one of two ways:

- By banns. Couples were required by law to have the minister announce their intent to marry or post notice of their intent on the church door for three consecutive Sundays before the marriage could take place, unless a special license was obtained. This gave others time to object to the marriage.
- By license. A couple applied to the proper church authority, usually the bishop of the diocese or the Archbishop of Armagh, for a license to marry. An allegation and a bond were drawn up. The allegation listed the names of the bride and groom, their ages, marital statuses, and intended place of marriage. The bond was made to insure that all the information given was valid. The license granted permission to marry. Most Irish allegations, bonds, and licenses have been destroyed. However, some abstracts and indexes of these records for various dioceses remain. The indexes include the names of the intended bride and groom and the year their license was issued. To find the marriage license indexes and abstracts available at the Family History Library, look in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - CHURCH RECORDSIRELAND - CHURCH RECORDS - INDEXES

Burials

Burial usually took place in the deceased's parish within a few days of the death. Burial records give the name of the deceased and the date of burial. Sometimes they also give the deceased's age, place of residence, cause of death, and occupation. Occasionally a wife's burial entry will provide the name of the husband, and a child's entry, the name of the father. Stillbirths are sometimes recorded in the burial registers. Stillbirths are not, however, listed in christening records.

Vestry Minutes

The vestry is the presiding council of a parish. Minutes of vestry meetings often mention parishioners, appointments of parish officers, and other items related to the parish. Occasionally records of births, christenings, marriages, deaths, and burials are included in the minutes.

Locating Church of Ireland Records

Many Church of Ireland registers were destroyed in the fire at the Public Record Office in Dublin in 1922. To protect against further loss or deterioration, most existing records have been filmed or photocopied and the originals or copies deposited in national repositories in Ireland. Some of the deposited church records are closed to the general public. To search these records, you must obtain written permission from the minister of the parish or the bishop of the diocese over that parish.

Ministers were never required to send vestry minutes to Dublin for safekeeping. Consequently, most vestry minutes are in local custody, though some have been deposited at the National Archives, the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland, or other repositories.

To obtain information from a Church of Ireland record in Ireland, follow these suggestions:

- Request a copy of the record from the Representative Church Body Library. A list of this library's parish records is found in James G. Ryan, ed., Irish Church Records. The library also has biographical sketches of Church of Ireland ministers. The address is:

Representative Church Body Library
Braemor Park
Rathgar
Dublin 14
IRELAND (EIRE)

- Request a copy of the record from the National Archives or the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland. To determine whether the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland has a copy of the record, consult the descriptive catalog of the office's holdings. To locate filmed catalogs for the National Archives at the Family History Library, look in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - ARCHIVES AND LIBRARIES - INDEXESIRELAND - ARCHIVES AND LIBRARIES - INVENTORIES, REGISTERS, CATALOGS

- Write to the minister of the appropriate parish to see if he will search his parish registers or vestry minutes for you. Ministers' addresses and jurisdictions are listed in the Church of Ireland Directory.

To find Church of Ireland records at the Family History Library, consult the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH] - CHURCH RECORDS.

Catholic Records

Catholic parish registers for most rural areas were not kept until the 1820s or later. Records for urban areas started earlier. Each parish kept its own records.

Catholic parish registers mainly include christening and marriage records. Few registers contain death or burial records. Occasionally a register will contain a parish census. Some Catholic registers are in Latin. (For help with Latin, see the “Language and Languages” section of this outline.)

Christenings (Baptisms)

Catholic christenings (baptisms) took place as soon as possible after children were born. Christening records nearly always include the date of baptism and the names of the child, the father, the mother (maiden name), and the sponsors or godparents. Sponsors or godparents were often related to the child. Some christening records also include the child's birth date and the family's place of residence.

Marriages

Catholic marriage records normally provide the date of the marriage, the names of the bride and groom, and the names of the witnesses. Occasionally, places of residence are listed. If the bride and groom are related, the degree of relationship is often given as well.

Locating Catholic Records

Original parish registers are in local custody. Sometimes a priest will search parish records for you. Names, addresses, and parishes of priests are listed in the Irish Catholic Directory and Diary.

Filmed copies of almost all pre-1880 parish records are held by the National Library of Ireland. Filmed copies of pre-1880 parish registers for Northern Ireland are also kept by the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland. Some of the filmed parish registers at the National Library are restricted. To search these registers, you must have written permission from the priest of the parish or the bishop of the diocese in which the registers were kept.

The Family History Library has microfilm copies of many Catholic parish registers. These are listed in the catalog under IRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH] - CHURCH RECORDS, where [PARISH] is the civil parish in which the Catholic parish is located. Maps showing Catholic parish boundaries for every county in Ireland can be found in John Grenham, Tracing Your Irish Ancestors: The Complete Guide (see the "For Further Reading" section).

Presbyterian Records

In 1605 Scottish Presbyterians began a massive migration into Northern Ireland. Congregations were organized at that time, but only a few congregations, mostly in County Antrim, kept early records. Most congregations started keeping records in the early 1800s.

In the 1700s and early 1800s several groups split off from the Presbyterian church. Seceding, non-subscribing, and reformed congregations were formed in many areas of Northern Ireland. These congregations kept their own records. In 1840 most of these congregations rejoined the main body of Irish Presbyterians. For a discussion and the names of the seceding, non-subscribing, and reformed Presbyterian congregations in Ireland, see the following book:

Stewart, David. The Seceders in Ireland. Belfast: Presbyterian Historical Society, 1950. (FHL book 941.5 K2ste; computer number 0171108.)

The following book lists Presbyterian congregations in Ireland and their ministers:

A History of Congregations in the Presbyterian Church in Ireland 1610-1982. Belfast: Presbyterian Historical Society of Ireland, 1982. (FHL book 941.5 K2h; computer number 0199388.)

Records kept by Presbyterian ministers include birth, baptism, and marriage records. These records are similar in content to Church of Ireland records except that mothers' maiden names are often given in the birth and baptism records.

Session Minutes

The session is the presiding council of a Presbyterian congregation. Minutes of session meetings often mention members of the congregation, appointments of committee members, and other items of congregational business. Occasionally records of births, christenings, and marriages are included in the minutes. Most session minutes are in local custody.

Locating Presbyterian Records

Presbyterian ministers have custody of original Presbyterian records. James G. Ryan, ed., Irish Church Records lists the Presbyterian records in local custody. The jurisdictions and addresses of local ministers can be found in The Presbyterian Church in Ireland: Directory and Statistics.

The Public Record Office of Northern Ireland has microfilm or paper copies of most of the Presbyterian registers for Northern Ireland and for the counties of Donegal, Cavan, and Monaghan. For a list of the office's Presbyterian records, see James G. Ryan, ed., Irish Church Records.

The Presbyterian Historical Society has copies of some of the Presbyterian and seceding Presbyterian records for Northern Ireland. The society's holdings are not complete. To determine which records the society possesses, contact the society at the following address:

Presbyterian Historical Society
Room 218
Church House
Fisherwick Place
Belfast BT1 6DW
NORTHERN IRELAND

The Family History Library also has copies of some Presbyterian records. These are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH], [TOWN] - CHURCH RECORDS.

Methodist Records

In 1746 a Methodist society began in Dublin. The following year, John and Charles Wesley, the founders of Methodism, visited Ireland. John Wesley urged his Irish followers to attend the Church of Ireland. Some followed his counsel; others chose to worship with the Quakers or Presbyterians instead.

At the 1816 Methodist conference in Ireland, the presiding body decided that Methodists should be baptized, be married by, and receive communion from their own ministers rather than from ministers of other churches. This proposed change resulted in a schism within the movement. Those who chose to continue affiliating with the Church of Ireland became known as the Primitive Methodists. The Wesleyan Methodists, the larger of the two groups, started their own church, kept their own records, and set up congregations throughout Ireland. Other splinter groups included the New Connexion and the Primitive Methodist Connexion. In 1878 the Primitive Methodists and the Wesleyan Methodists united. The two Connexion groups rejoined the main body in 1932.

Methodist records consist mainly of baptism and marriage records that are similar in content to Church of Ireland records. Occasionally a circuit minute book or vestry book was kept. Since there were few Methodist cemeteries, Methodist death or burial records are rare. Methodists were usually buried in Church of Ireland cemeteries and their burial records kept in Church of Ireland registers.

Locating Methodist Records

Primitive and Wesleyan Methodist records are in local custody. You may obtain information from these records through correspondence with individual ministers. Names, addresses, and jurisdictions of Methodist ministers can be found in the 1992 Minutes of Conference.

The Public Record Office of Northern Ireland has microfilm copies of Methodist records for several congregations in Northern Ireland and in the Republic of Ireland. James G. Ryan, ed., Irish Church Records lists the Methodist records held by the office and gives their Public Record Office accession numbers.

The New Connexion and Primitive Methodist Connexion groups were administered from England. Their records were kept by various British circuits (districts presided over by travelling ministers). Consequently, pre-1905 New Connexion records and pre-1910 Primitive Methodist Connexion records are held in the Methodist archive at the following address:

The John Rylands University of Manchester
Manchester M13 9PP
ENGLAND

Records for either of the Connexion groups after 1905 and 1910, respectively, are held by individual churches in Ireland.

Smith's Inventory of Genealogical Sources: Ireland lists Methodist records published in Irish periodicals that are available at the Family History Library.

Other Methodist records available at the Family History Library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - CHURCH RECORDSIRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH] - CHURCH RECORDS

Quaker (Society of Friends) Records

Around 1653 Quakers emigrated from England to Ireland. If you are not sure your ancestors were Quakers, consult the list of chief Irish Quaker surnames found in the appendix in:

Harrison, Richard S. “Irish Quaker Records.” In Irish Church Records. Edited by James G. Ryan.

Quakers held both weekly and monthly meetings. Births, marriages, and deaths were reported in the monthly meetings. Around 1655 Quakers began keeping records of their meetings. Irish Quaker records are held in two regional Quaker repositories: the Dublin Friends Historical Library and the Reglious Society of Friends. The Dublin Friends Historical Library only has records for the Republic of Ireland. The Religious Society of Friends, Ulster Quarterly Meeting mainly has records for Northern Ireland. Both repositories contain minutes of meetings; birth, marriage, and death records; diaries; pedigrees; wills; and other records. The address is:

NORTHERN IRELAND

The National Library of Ireland in Dublin and the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland have microfilm copies of some Quaker records. The Family History Library also has microfilm copies of some Quaker records. These are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:
IRELAND - CHURCH RECORDSIRELAND, [COUNTY] - CHURCH RECORDSIRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH] - CHURCH RECORDSIRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH], [TOWN] - CHURCH RECORDS

Jewish Records

Ireland has only a few Jewish synagogues. Jewish records have been deposited in the Irish Jewish Museum. The museum contains records from synagogues and from Jewish communal institutions. These records include registrations of births, marriages, and deaths. For more information about these records, write the museum at the following address:

Irish Jewish Museum
3/4 Walworth Road
South Circular Road
Dublin 8
IRELAND (EIRE)

The Family History Library does not have any Jewish records for Ireland.

Other Churches

Many other denominations have established churches or congregations in Ireland. In the mid-1600s Congregationalists and Baptists first came to Ireland as soldiers under Cromwell. Huguenots, seeking religious freedom, also came in the 1600s. Most Huguenots affiliated themselves with the Church of Ireland or with the Presbyterian Church. Members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints established branches in Ireland by 1850.

Records of other churches are primarily in local custody (except for Latter-day Saint records, which are mainly in Salt Lake City, Utah). Huguenot church records have been published in:

The Publications of the Huguenot Society of London. N.p.: Huguenot Society of London, 18--. (FHL book 942.1/L1 B4h.)

Copies of records for other churches can be found at the Family History Library. These are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH] - CHURCH RECORDS.

Locating Church Records

Church records are in local custody. Many church records have also been filmed or photocopied and the originals or copies stored in repositories.

Hayes's Sources can be used to determine if and where church records were deposited before 1977. Look in the subject indexes of Hayes's Sources under the headings “Parish Registers” and “Vestry Books” for Church of Ireland records, and look by denomination (Catholic, Methodist, Presbyterian, etc.) for other churches' records. In the place indexes, look for church records by county and then town, city, or parish.

The Public Record Office of Northern Ireland has published:

An Irish Genealogical Source: Guide to Church Records. Belfast: Ulster Historical Foundation on behalf of PRONI, 1994. (FHL book 941.6 A3gc.) This is a guide to locating church records in the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland. It also indicates which records are still in local custody.

The descriptive catalog of holdings of the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland details that archives' holdings of church records. The Family History Library has a filmed copy of the descriptive catalog. The sections describing church records are found on films 1,701,904-5; 1,701,989 computer number 0626369; 1,736,433 items 5-9 computer number 0647746; 1,736,434 items 1-2 computer numbers 0647746, 0647690.

The appendices in James G. Ryan, ed., Irish Church Records give some names and addresses of church record archives. The appendices also provide details about Church of Ireland, Presbyterian, and Methodist records held in local custody or deposited in national archives.

Local heritage or genealogical centres (see the “Archives and Libraries” section of this outline) throughout Ireland are currently indexing church records. To determine if a centre has indexed the records you need, consult the Directory of Parish Registers Indexed in Ireland. Additional church records have been indexed since the directory was published. Contact the appropriate centre for more current information and to determine the fees charged for searching and copying index entries.

To see if the church records you need are available at the Family History Library, check the library catalog. To identify transcripts or abstracts of church records found in Irish genealogical periodicals available at the Family History Library, consult Smith's Inventory of Genealogical Sources: Ireland.

Search Strategies

As you or your agent search church records, use the following strategies:

- Search all parish registers and other available church records of the appropriate locality for the time period you are researching.
- Search surrounding localities if you cannot find records in the expected locality.
- Note all entries, including burials, for the surname you are searching (unless the name is very common).
- Note gaps or missing pages in the record. You may want to search alternative records for the missing time periods.
- If you find little or no mention of your family in parish records, search other records.
- Use the additional information (residence, occupation, etc.) given in parish registers to find other records to search.

CIVIL REGISTRATION

Civil registration records are government records of births, marriages, and deaths. Because Irish civil registration records are indexed and cover most of the population, they are an important source of genealogical data, particularly of names, dates, and places of births, marriages, and deaths.

General Historical Background

Before civil registration, churches alone kept the records of births, marriages, and deaths in Ireland. On 1 April 1845 the government began registering non-Catholic marriages. On 1 January 1864 the government began registering all Irish births, marriages, and deaths.

For civil registration purposes, Ireland is organized into districts. In each district, registrars record births and deaths, while ministers or other officials who perform the ceremonies register marriages.

Quarterly, the superintendent registrar of each district forwards copies of the district's registrations to the appropriate General Register office. The original records remain with the district registrar.

Since 1922 registrations for Northern Ireland have been housed at Belfast, while those for the Republic of Ireland have remained in Dublin. Pre-1922 records for all of Ireland are in Dublin.

Information Recorded in Civil Registers

Births

Birth registrations typically include the child's name, sex, birth date, and birthplace; the parents' names (including the mother's maiden name) and the father's occupation; and the informant's signature, residence, and qualification (often the relationship to the child being registered).

Marriages

Marriage registrations include the marriage date, place, and denomination (for church marriages); the names of the bride and groom, their ages, occupations, marital statuses, and residences at the time of marriage; the names and occupations of their fathers and often whether their fathers were deceased; and the signatures of the bride, groom, and witnesses. Marriages were usually performed in the bride's parish and were registered by the performing minister.

Divorces

Divorce in Ireland was almost nonexistent. The few divorces that did take place were granted by the English government. For more information on divorce records, see the England Research Outline.

Deaths

Death certificates give only the name, occupation, age at death, and marital status of the deceased; duration of the illness; date, place, and cause of death; and signature, qualification, and residence of the informant. A spouse's name is sometimes listed. If a child or unmarried female died, the father's name is often written in the occupation space.

Civil registrations of deaths are of limited genealogical value because they:

- Do not normally contain parentage or birth information.
- May be inaccurate (the informant may not have known the information requested).
- May not contain enough information to distinguish your ancestor from others with the same name.

Nonetheless, a death certificate is usually the only civil record for persons born or married before government registration began in 1864.

Locating Civil Registration Records

Civil registration records are kept at the superintendent registrars' offices in the districts. Duplicates are kept at the General Register offices. The General Register Office for the Republic of Ireland has birth, marriage, and death indexes and corresponding records, including registrations of Irish subjects at sea, abroad, or in the military through 1921 for all of Ireland. The office's post-1921 records cover Republic of Ireland counties only. The address is:

General Register Office
Joyce House
8-11 Lombard Street East
Dublin 2
IRELAND (EIRE)

The General Register Office of Northern Ireland has birth, marriage, and death records, including registrations of Irish at sea, abroad, or in the military from 1922 on for Northern Ireland only. The address is:
General Register Office
Oxford House
49/55 Chichester Street
Belfast BT1 4HL
NORTHERN IRELAND

When requesting a registration certificate by mail from these offices, include:

- A check or money order for the search fee.
- The full name and sex of the person sought.
- The names of the parents, if known (only when requesting a birth record).
- The approximate date and place of the event.

Indexes to Civil Registration Records

Indexes can help you find a registration entry for your ancestor. Before 1878, registration indexes were arranged alphabetically by year. Since 1878, indexes have remained alphabetical but have been divided by quarter. Most registration indexes list only the name of the individual registered and the district, volume, and page number of that person's registration entry. The death indexes also list the individual's age at death. Republic of Ireland post-1927 birth indexes include the mother's maiden name. In searching for an index entry, knowing the name of the district and at least an approximate year in which the birth, marriage, or death occurred will reduce your search time.

Place-names in the indexes are for districts. In rural areas, many villages and parishes belong to one district. In urban areas, a city may be divided into several districts.

To identify the district in which your ancestor lived, use the following sources:

- Alphabetical Index to the Townlands and Towns of Ireland, (1871 Census) (see p. 28), which lists Irish localities and the districts that served those localities in 1871.
- Ireland, Census Office, General Alphabetical Index to the Townlands and Towns of Ireland, (1901 Census, [London: Her Majesty's Stationery Office, 1901?]; FHL book Ref Q 941.5 X22g 1901; film 865,092 computer number 0650985), which lists Irish localities and the districts that served those localities in 1901.
- Civil Registration Districts of Ireland, (Salt Lake City, Utah: Genealogical Library, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1983; FHL book Reg 941.5 V2c computer number 0208759), which provides maps and districts' names as they were in 1871.

If you find an index entry, you can use that entry to request a copy of the original record from (1) the General Register Office in Dublin if the event was recorded before 1922 or took place in the Republic of Ireland, or (2) the General Register Office in Belfast if the event took place in or after 1922 in Northern Ireland.

If you cannot find an index reference, consider the following reasons:

- There are separate supplemental indexes for births and deaths for 1864-1870.
- Late registrations of births and deaths are indexed separately at the end of each index volume.
- Surnames are often spelled differently than expected.
- Surnames with prefixes, such as O'Bryan or McDonnal, may be listed without their prefixes (Bryan, Donnal).
- Events are filed by the date they were registered, not the date they occurred and may therefore be indexed in a later volume. (For example, a birth on 20 December 1879 which was registered on 6 January 1880 will be listed in the January-March volume of 1880.)
- Indexes were hand-prepared and may contain errors, such as copying mistakes (for example, the interchange of T and F) and missed entries.
- Some people are registered under a different name than they used later in life.
- Some marriages are indexed by the name of only one spouse.
- A woman's surname in the marriage index is sometimes her surname from a previous marriage and not her maiden surname.
- Vital information provided by the family (particularly age at death) is often incorrect.
- People with common names are sometimes difficult to distinguish in the index.
- Many deaths are registered under the name unknown.
- Children born before their parents were married may be listed under the mother's maiden name.
- Some children are simply listed as male or female if they were not named by the time of registration.
- Some events were not registered, though registration of births, marriages, and deaths was required by law.

If, after considering the above factors, you cannot find a civil birth, marriage, or death certificate for your ancestor, you may want to search church or other records.

Records at the Family History Library

The Family History Library has microfilm copies of the civil registration indexes of births, marriages, and deaths for Ireland and Northern Ireland through 1958 (through 1959 for Northern Ireland). The Library also has microfilm copies of:

- Pre-1871 marriage and death certificates for both Ireland and Northern Ireland.
- Birth certificates from 1864 through March 1881 and from 1900 through 1913 for both Ireland and Northern Ireland.
- Birth certificates for the Republic of Ireland from 1930 through 1955.
- Birth, marriage, and death certificates for Northern Ireland from 1922 through 1959.
- Some registration certificates of Irish subjects at sea, abroad, and in the military.

The library's copies of civil registration records and indexes for Ireland are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - CIVIL REGISTRATION. Other civil registration records, such as records of births at sea, are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under GREAT BRITAIN - CIVIL REGISTRATION.

COURT RECORDS

Court records contain information about people who were involved in litigation or other court matters. Most court records provide lists of people who served as defendants, plaintiffs, jurors, or witnesses. Court records may provide these individuals' residences, occupations, physical descriptions, and family relationships.

Irish court records are broadly classed as temporal or ecclesiastical. The temporal courts include the Courts of Chancery, Exchequer, King's Bench, Common Pleas, and individual county courts. The ecclesiastical courts had jurisdiction over ecclesiastical issues, matrimony, and probate.

Margaret Dixson Falley, Irish and Scotch-Irish Ancestral Research (see “For Further Reading”) provides a good description of court records and lists repositories and published inventories of court records. Many of the published inventories she notes are available at the Family History Library. They are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - ARCHIVES AND LIBRARIESIRELAND - ARCHIVES AND LIBRARIES - INDEXESIRELAND - ARCHIVES AND LIBRARIES - INVENTORIES, REGISTERS, CATALOGS

The Family History Library has few court records. Court records available at the library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - COURT RECORDSIRELAND, [COUNTY] - COURT RECORDS

DIRECTORIES

Directories are alphabetical lists of names with corresponding addresses. Knowing an individual's address can be very helpful in searching the census records of a large city (see the "Census" section of this outline). The information in directories is for the year they are published. Directories for Dublin first appeared in the early eighteenth century and continue today. Provincial (town) directories began somewhat later and have continued only sporadically. Besides names and addresses, directories sometimes include:

- City maps.
- Indexes or listings of inhabitants by streets.
- Addresses of schools, churches, cemeteries, and other institutions.
- Streets and the civil parishes they are in.

Inclusion or omission in directories of successive years may indicate when a person moved to or left a city, retired, or died. Not everyone was listed in directories, but those who had a trade or were of a higher social status were generally listed.

The following types of directories may be found for areas of Ireland:

- Postal or commercial directories, which provide alphabetical lists of people engaged in some type of trade or profession.
- Trade directories, which provide alphabetical lists of trades and professions with the names and sometimes residential addresses of persons engaged in those trades or professions.
- Court directories, which list government officials and private (upper-class) residents.
- Law directories, which name judges, lawyers, notaries, and staff of various courts.
- Telephone directories, which give names, addresses, and telephone numbers of individuals and businesses.
- Specialty or professional directories, which were occasionally published for various occupations.
- Organizational directories, which list addresses of societies, libraries, newspapers, and other organizations.
- Church directories, which give information about and addresses for church jurisdictions, buildings, and leaders (see the "Church Directories" section of this outline).

For a list of Irish directories and a summary of the information contained in each, consult:

ffolliott, Rosemary, and Donal F. Begley. "Guide to Irish Directories." In Irish Genealogy: A Record Finder (see the "For Further Reading" section).

The Family History Library has many Irish directories. These are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATION

Emigration records are records of people leaving a country. Immigration records are records of people entering a country. Records of emigration and immigration include passenger lists, permissions to emigrate, records of passports issued, lists of transported prisoners, and registers of assistance to emigrate. These records may contain the name, age, occupation, destination, place of origin or birthplace, date of departure, and date and ship of arrival of the person immigrating or emigrating. Names of fellow passengers may suggest familial relationships or provide hints about a passenger's place of origin or destination.

Many emigration and immigration sources not discussed in this section are listed in Smith's Inventory of Genealogical Sources: Ireland.

A more detailed discussion of emigration and immigration records is also provided in Margaret Dixson Falley, Irish and Scotch-Irish Ancestral Research (see the “For Further Reading” section).

Emigration from Ireland

No records are required for movements within the British Isles (England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Isle of Man, and Channel Islands). Records were not required for free emigrants to the United States until 1773, to Canada until 1865, or to Australia, New Zealand, or South Africa until the twentieth century. There was no systematic, official method of emigration from Ireland. As a result, you may not find emigration records for your Irish ancestor.

Emigration from Ireland began as early as 1603, when people immigrated to areas such as continental Europe, the islands of the Caribbean, the British colonies, and other parts of the British Isles. Emigration increased during periods of civil or religious unrest or famine in Ireland as well as during various gold rushes in Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, and the United States. The period of greatest emigration began around 1780 and reached its peak from 1845 to 1855, when more than two million people left Ireland because of the potato famine. The following categories of emigrants account for most people who emigrated from Ireland:

- Free emigrants. Starting in the seventeenth century, emigrants left Ireland to seek opportunity in a new land; to flee religious persecution, poverty, or oppression; and to seek political asylum following rebellion in Ireland.
- Assisted emigrants. In the nineteenth century, qualified emigrants received passage money or land grants as incentives to emigrate. Assistance was viewed by officials as an alternative to providing poor relief for able-bodied, unemployed workers and for the starving masses during famine. After 1840, colonies such as New Zealand and Australia offered money or land grants to skilled workers to attract needed immigrants.

- Transported prisoners. From 1611 to 1870, more than fifty thousand Irish criminals were sentenced to deportation to a penal colony for a number of years. Beginning with Irishmen who rebelled against Cromwell's army in 1649, political prisoners were also often deported. Many Irish prisoners were sent to America, primarily to Virginia and Maryland, until 1775. From 1788 to 1869, over forty thousand Irish prisoners were sent to Australia. Many of those deported were later pardoned on the condition that they would never return to Ireland.
- Military personnel. Soldiers serving overseas were offered land or other inducements to settle in the colony where they were serving when they were discharged. This settlement practice was common for soldiers in Australia from 1791, Canada from 1815, and New Zealand from 1844.

Finding the Emigrant's Place of Origin

Once you have traced your family back to an Irish emigrant ancestor, you must determine the place in Ireland from which that ancestor came. For ancestors who were born, married, or died after 1863 (1845 for some marriages), you may be able to find the place of origin by using the government indexes to birth, marriage, and death registrations (see the “Civil Registration” section of this outline).

You may also learn your ancestor's place of origin by talking to family members or through documents (in an archive or library or in the possession of a relative), such as birth, marriage, and death certificates, obituaries, gravestone inscriptions, journals, photographs, letters, family Bibles, military records, society and lodge records, land petitions and deeds, church records, naturalization applications and petitions, passenger lists, newspaper announcements or articles, passports, and family heirlooms.

For more information on identifying the place of origin of an immigrant ancestor, see the Records of Irish Emigrants in Their Destination Countries

Immigration records of the country to which your ancestor immigrated may help you determine your ancestor's place of origin, occupation, and age. Knowing an approximate date and port of arrival or the name of the ship on which your ancestor sailed will help you search immigration records. Many immigration records are held in repositories, usually in the destination country. The immigration records that are available at the Family History Library are generally listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under [DESTINATION COUNTRY] - EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATION.

United States. Immigrant lists from the various ports of entry provide the most information on Irish immigrants to the United States. While several ports of entry existed, the majority of Irish immigrants came through New York. The following published lists and indexes of information on Irish immigrants to America are found in the Family History Library's US/Canada collection:

Filby, P. William and Mary K. Meyer, eds. Passenger and Immigration Lists Index. 3 vols. plus supps. Detroit: Gale Research Co., 1981-. (FHL book Ref 973 W32p computer number 0075625.) This ongoing series indexes more than 1,000 published lists of Irish immigrants to the United States.

Filby, P. William and Mary K. Meyer, eds. Passenger and Immigrations Lists Bibliography, 1538-1900. 2d ed. Detroit: Gale Research Co., 1988. (FHL book 973 W33p 1988 computer number 0482522.) This bibliography references over 2,500 published lists of Irish immigrants to the United States that will eventually be included in Filby's Passenger and Immigrations Lists Index.

Glazier, Ira A., ed. The Famine Emigrants: Lists of Irish Immigrants Arriving at the Port of New York, 1846-51. 7 vols. Baltimore: Genealogical Publishing Company, 1983-86. (FHL book Ref Q 974.71 W3f computer number 0202044.) These volumes contain many lists and indexes of Irish immigrants to the United States.

Harris, Ruth-Ann M., and Donald M. Jacobs, eds. The Search for Missing Friends: Irish Immigrant Advertisements Placed in the "Boston Pilot." 3 vols. Boston: New England Historic Genealogical Society, 1989-93. (FHL book Ref 974.461 H29s computer number 0511791.) These volumes list more than ten thousand Irish immigrants to the United States and their places of origin. The information is based on advertisements run between 1831 and 1856.

Lists of passengers arriving at most U.S. ports after 1820 are available at the Family History Library. Many are indexed. For more information on these lists and indexes, see the United States Research Outline.

To learn more about the emigration process and life on board an American-bound emigrant ship, see the following book:

Coleman, Terry. Going To America. New York: Pantheon Books, 1972. (FHL book 973 W2cg computer number 0306730.)

To find United States immigration records at the Family History Library, look in the Locality Search of the catalog under UNITED STATES - EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATION.

Canada. From 1815 to 1850, Canada was the primary destination of Irish emigrants. Until 1900, the major ports of immigrant arrivals were Quebec City and Halifax. After 1900, arrivals were more widespread. Canadian passenger lists are rare before 1865. Those from 1865 to 1900 are available at the Family History Library. For more information on Canadian immigration records, see the Canada Research Outline.

Australia. In 1788, Australia was founded as a British penal colony. Australian immigration records vary in content and coverage by state. Some contain such details as the immigrant's birthplace; residence in Britain; education; mother's maiden name; and father's name, occupation, and residence. Some are indexed. In Australia, immigration records are kept at state archives. Most pre-1900 Australian immigration records are available at the Family History Library and are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under AUSTRALIA, [STATE] - EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATION RECORDS.

New Zealand. In 1840 the British began colonizing New Zealand. Most immigrants to New Zealand received some form of assistance either from the New Zealand Company or from a government or church association set up to encourage immigration. Besides the age, origin, and occupation, New Zealand immigration records usually include additional details such as the wife's and children's names and ages and details of settlement. Many New Zealand immigration records are available at the Family History Library and are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under NEW ZEALAND, [PROVINCE] - EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATION RECORDS.

Naturalization records in the destination country can be more helpful than immigration records in determining your ancestor's place of origin. To learn more about naturalization records, consult the "Naturalization and Citizenship" section of the destination country's research outline, if available, or see the Tracing Immigrant Origins Research Outline.

British Records of Irish Emigration

Many records of Irish emigration are kept in England. To effectively search these records, it helps to know the approximate date of emigration, the ship in which your ancestor emigrated, the type of or reason for emigration, or the previous residence of your ancestor in Britain. If you know the ship name, Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping, 1776-1880 (LaCrosse, Wisconsin: Brookhaven Press, 1981; FHL fiche 6024581-5194 6025259-95, 6053006-7 computer number 0106601; not available at Family History Centers) may provide additional details on the ship, including ports of embarkation and arrival. Once you have gathered background information, you can search British emigration records including:

- Passenger lists. Passenger lists are port records listing departing or arriving passengers. British passenger departure lists are rare before 1890. From January 1890, records were kept of passengers departing from ports in England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales. These lists usually give the emigrant's name, age, occupation, departure date, address in the United Kingdom, and sometimes destination. These records are arranged by date and by port of departure. They are kept at the Public Record Office, Kew. The Family History Library does not have copies of these records. Therefore, you may want to check Irish emigrant lists that have been compiled from these records and published in recent years by such authors as Ira A. Glazier, Michael Tepper, and Brian Mitchell.
- Assisted emigrant registers. Assisted emigrant registers list people applying for assistance to emigrate. These records often contain the petitioner's name, age, occupation, residence, destination, name of sponsor, address of relative, and size of family. The registers available at the Family History Library appear in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATIONGREAT BRITAIN - EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATION

Immigration into Ireland

Immigrants to Ireland came primarily from elsewhere within the British Isles or from continental Europe by way of England. Specific groups of immigrants included refugees from various wars (such as the French Revolution), Huguenots, Germans, and Jews. Ireland kept no official immigration records, so you must rely primarily on (1) English records of immigrants who passed through England on their way to Ireland and (2) emigration records of the country from which your ancestor moved.

No consistent records of arrivals into the United Kingdom were kept until 1836. Beginning in 1836, certificates of entering aliens were kept. These are arranged by port. They provide name, nationality, profession, date of arrival, country last visited, and the signature of the alien. The Public Records Office, Kew has an alphabetical index to these certificates.

Beginning in 1878, passenger lists were kept of those entering the United Kingdom (see “British Records of Irish Emigration” in this section). Passenger lists no longer exist for the years between 1878 and 1883. Records surviving from 1883 to 1891 are for the Irish ports of Cork (Queenstown), Londonderry, and Belfast. After 1891 the records are more complete. However, passengers from Europe or the Mediterranean are rarely listed. These passenger lists are arranged by port and are kept at the Public Record Office, Kew.

One good, though limited, source of information on British immigrants, especially for before 1836, is naturalization and denization records (see the “Naturalization and Citizenship” section of this outline).

Other sources of information on people entering Ireland include court records, state papers, and plantation and settlement records.

The Family History Library has few records of immigration into Ireland. The sources the library does have are mostly published works. They are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATIONENGLAND - EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATIONGREAT BRITAIN - EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATION

The library may have emigration records of the country from which your ancestor moved. These are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under [COUNTRY OF ORIGIN] - EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATION.

GAZETTEERS

A gazetteer is a dictionary of place-names. Gazetteers describe towns and villages; parishes and counties; and rivers, mountains, and other geographical features. Gazetteers generally list place-names in alphabetical order.

Gazetteers may provide the following information about a locality:

- The most common spelling of the place-name
- Location
- County and other civil jurisdictions
- Ecclesiastical jurisdictions
- Distance from nearby places

A gazetteer entry for Ballintoy, for example, includes the following information:

"Ballintoy, a parish containing a village of the same name, on the north coast of the barony of Carey, and of the county of Antrim, Ulster. . . . This parish is a rectory and a separate benefice in the dio[cese] of Connor. . . . In 1834, the parishioners consisted of 2,122 [Irish] Churchmen, 933 Presbyterians, and 1,064 Roman Catholics" (The Parliamentary Gazetteer of Ireland, see below).

Several difficulties arise in dealing with Irish place-names. First, Irish place-names often come from the Gaelic or Irish language, though some have been given English variations. Second, Irish place-names were sometimes spelled phonetically in family records and documents in other countries, because many immigrants did not know the accepted spellings. The phonetic spellings can vary widely from the accepted spellings because recorders sometimes misunderstood what the immigrants said. Finally, there are many places in Ireland with the same or similar names. A gazetteer may help you resolve each of these difficulties.

Helpful gazetteers include:

Lewis, Samuel. Topographical Dictionary of Ireland. 2 vols. London: S. Lewis and Co., 1837. (FHL book Ref 941.5 E5, 1837; film 413,528; 496,572 item 3; or 599,557 computer number 0189535.) This dictionary contains historical and statistical descriptions of the counties, cities, boroughs, parishes, and corporate and market towns in Ireland. Later editions of this dictionary are available.

The Parliamentary Gazetteer of Ireland. 10 vols. Dublin: A. Fullarton and Co., 1844. (FHL book Ref 941.5 E5p; film 824,043 items 4-5 to 824,045; fiche 6020358-82 computer number 0112080.) These volumes provide information similar to that in Lewis's dictionary. These volumes also provide historical and statistical comparisons based on information from the 1831 and 1841 censuses.

Unfortunately, Irish gazetteers often do not list townlands, though many place-names in records about Irish people are townlands. The sources listed below under “Finding Place-Names in the Family History Library Catalog” may help you locate Irish townlands and identify the parish and county they are in.

Similarly, gazetteers rarely list property names, though a property name, rather than a town or parish name, may have been handed down within a family as the place where the family originated. The Irish Place-Names Commission at the Ordnance Survey Office in Dublin may be able to help you locate a property name when gazetteers fail. The address of the Place-Names Commission is:

Place-Names Commission
Phoenix Park
Dublin 8
IRELAND (EIRE)

The Family History Library's gazetteers and other guides to place-names are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:
IRELAND - GAZETTEERSIRELAND, [COUNTY] - GAZETTEERS

Finding Place-Names in the Family History Library Catalog

Irish records may be listed in the catalog under the country, county, parish, and city or town in which they were kept. Townlands or other small places are seldom included in a catalog listing. To find the county under which a parish or city is listed, use the see references on the first few microfiche of the Locality Search for Ireland. Or type the city or parish in the Locality Browse screen of the compact disc version of the catalog. The computer will display the county under which that city or parish is listed.

Regardless of how a place-name may have been spelled at various times, Irish places are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog by the name and spelling that appears in the 1871 census as recorded in Ireland, Registrar General, Alphabetical Index to the Townlands and Towns of Ireland (Dublin: Alexander Thom, 1877; FHL book Ref 941.5 X2ci; film 476,999 item 2; fiche 6020345-53; computer number 0111923; no circulation to Family History Centers). This index is arranged alphabetically by the name of the townland, town, village, or place. A brief entry for each locality includes the locality's county, barony, parish, poor law union, area in statute acres, and reference for locating it on Ordnance Survey maps.

Similar place-name indexes based on the 1851 and 1901 censuses exist. The index for 1851 is only available in book format and so may not be available at all Family History Centers. The index for 1901, the General Alphabetical Index to the Townlands and Towns of Ireland, is available on microfilm and can be ordered through Family History Centers.

GENEALOGY

In this outline, the heading genealogy is used to describe (1) sources that contain family history information gathered by individuals, societies, and archives and (2) sources that discuss how to do family history research. Genealogical records may include pedigree charts, compiled family information, correspondence, ancestor lists, research exchange files, record abstracts, and collections of original or copied documents. These are excellent sources that can save you time. However, they may contain inaccuracies. You should verify the information found in them.

Handbooks and Manuals

Handbooks and manuals on how to do Irish research can also save you time. They often suggest additional sources and techniques that will facilitate your Irish research. Some handbooks focus on specific localities in Ireland, such as Dublin. Such specific handbooks mention records and sources for their locality that are not mentioned in more general handbooks. Specific handbooks may also alert you to problems or situations that you may encounter when doing research in the targeted locality. These handbooks can thus be very helpful.

Some genealogical handbooks and manuals are mentioned in this outline, but many others exist. The genealogical handbooks and manuals specific to Ireland and its localities that can be found at the Family History Library are listed in the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - GENEALOGY - HANDBOOKS AND MANUALSIRELAND, [COUNTY] - GENEALOGY - HANDBOOKS AND MANUALSIRELAND, [COUNTY], [CITY] - GENEALOGY - HANDBOOKS AND MANUALS

Major Indexes and Databases

The Family History Library has several sources that can help you access previous research or refer you to others who are interested in sharing research:

International Genealogical Index. The International Genealogical Index provides names and vital information for more than 1.4 million deceased people who lived in Ireland. This valuable tool lists birth, christening, and marriage dates and places. The index for Ireland includes names extracted by volunteers from parish registers and civil registration and names submitted by other researchers.

The International Genealogical Index is available on microfiche and on compact disc as part of FamilySearch™ (see the “Records at the Family History Library” section of this outline).

Ancestral File. Ancestral File, a part of FamilySearch™, contains family history information linked together in family groups and pedigrees contributed since 1979. Ancestral File contains information on thousands of Irish families. It can print pedigree charts, family group records, and individual summary sheets for any person in the file.

Family Group Records Collection (Archive and Patron). More than eight million family group record forms—including many for Irish families—have been microfilmed and incorporated into the Family Group Records Collection. The collection is divided into two major parts: the Archive section and the Patrons section. The film numbers for both parts are listed in the Author/Title Search of the catalog under FAMILY GROUP RECORDS COLLECTION.

Family Histories

Some Irish families write histories or newsletters that contain biographies, photographs, and other genealogical information.

The Family History Library has a number of these Irish family histories and newsletters. They are listed in the Surname Search of the catalog under the major surnames discussed in each publication. Allied families may not be listed.

Many Irish family histories are also indexed in:

de Breffny, Brian, ed. and comp. Bibliography of Irish Family History and Genealogy. Dublin: Golden Eagle Books, 1974. (FHL book Ref 941.5 D23d computer number 0189535.)

Grenham, John. Tracing Your Irish Ancestors: The Complete Guide (see the "For Further Reading" section).

Maclysaght, Edward. Bibliography of Irish Family History.

These books are arranged alphabetically by surname and together list over thirteen hundred family histories.

Indexes to Genealogical Collections

The Family History Library has some unique collections of genealogical information on Irish families, including published and unpublished collections of family lineages, research files of prominent genealogists, and a few surname indexes. The following sources index many of the library's genealogical collections:

Surname Index. 3 vols. Dublin: Genealogical Office. (FHL book Ref Q 941.5 A5g; film 928,034 items 1-3 computer number 0383556.) This index lists pedigrees and other records deposited at the Genealogical Office, Dublin. It also lists the pedigrees found in the Genealogists Magazine (1929-59) and The Irish Genealogist (1937–). The supplementary volume of this series provides call numbers for those records, pedigrees, and periodicals available at the Family History Library.

McAnlis, Virginia Wade. The Consolidated Index to the Records of the Genealogical Office, Dublin, Ireland. Vols. 1-4. Issaquah, WA: Virginia R. McAnlis, 1994. (FHL book 941.5 A3mv.) This index to the manuscripts of the Genealogical Office gives microfilm numbers for the National Library of Ireland and the Family History Library in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Hayes's Sources.

Smith's Inventory of Genealogical Sources: Ireland. This manuscript indexes many periodicals and journals available at the Family History Library that contain family pedigrees.

Pedigree Index. 3 vols. Typescript. Salt Lake City, Utah: Genealogical Society of Utah, [1964?]. (FHL book Ref Q 941.5 A5gp; film 255,494; computer number 0170953.) This index gives film numbers for many pedigrees available at the Family History Library.

The following guide and supplements index printed sources containing pedigrees of at least three generations. These guides are excellent for finding Irish pedigrees:

Marshall, George W., ed. The Genealogist's Guide. 1903. Reprint. Baltimore: Genealogical Publishing Co., 1980. (FHL book Ref 929.142 M356g 1980; film 496,451 computer number 0191131.) This is the main volume of these three sources.

Whitmore, John Beach, comp. A Genealogical Guide: An Index to British Pedigrees in Continuation of Marshall's Genealogist's Guide (1903). London: Walford Brothers (sold guide for compiler), 1953. (FHL book Ref 929.142 M356g supp.; fiche 6054492 computer number 0375591.) This source supplements Marshall's guide.

Barrow, Geoffrey B., comp. The Genealogist's Guide: An Index to Printed British Pedigrees and Family Histories, 1950-1975. London: Research Publishing Co., 1977. (FHL book Ref 929.142 M356g 1950-1975; fiche 6026284 computer number 0008520.) This source supplements Marshall's and Whitmore's guides.

Research Coordination

You can use Ancestral File to identify others who are searching your family line and to register your interest in coordinating research.

You can also use the following publications to identify the names and addresses of individuals researching the same family name. Search all editions of both publications, since both are published yearly and specific family names may appear in only one edition. You may have to do some research to connect your family with a family of the same surname listed in one of these sources.

Johnson, Keith A., and Malcolm R. Sainty. Genealogical Research Directory: National and International. Sydney: (The Editors of the) Genealogical Research Directory, 1997. (FHL book Ref 929.1025 G286grd computer number 0397541.)

Park, Keith, and Tracey Park. Family History Knowledge - UK 1992. 2d ed. Melksham, England: Family History Club, 1992. (FHL book Ref 942 D27pk computer number 0675858.)

HERALDRY

Heraldry is the designing, use, regulation, and recording of coats of arms and related emblems. Coats of arms were granted to individuals, not families or surnames. Coats of arms were originally granted to identify individuals in battle. Eventually, the crown began to grant coats of arms to people who performed heroic deeds, made notable achievements, or held prominent positions. The right to use a coat of arms could be inherited only by legitimate male descendants of the person to whom the coat was granted. Most Irish ancestors did not have a coat of arms.

Grants of arms in Ireland have been recorded since 1552 by a representative of the crown called the Ulster King of Arms. Since Edward VI created the office of Ulster King of Arms in 1552, most of those who have obtained coats of arms through that office have been people of English descent living in Ireland. The native Irish originally did not believe in the granting of arms by a herald, so until the late seventeenth century such grants were not common practice in Ireland.

In the late sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries, the Ulster King of Arms visited the landed families throughout Ireland. He asked for proof of male descent from the original grantee of arms and drew up pedigrees for these families. Heraldic visitations are the records of these visits.

Heraldic and genealogical information about Irish landed families can be found in the following book:

Burke, Sir John Bernard. The General Armory of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales: Comprising a Registry of Armorial Bearings from the Earliest to the Present Time. Last ed. 1884. Reprint. Baltimore: Genealogical Publishing Company, 1969. (FHL book Ref 942 D24b 1969 computer number 0162588; 1884 ed.: film 962,347 item 1 and 990,439 item 10 computer number 0165287.) This source alphabetically lists surnames with blazons, provides a brief explanation of heraldry and a glossary of heraldic terms, and gives a few black and white sample coats of arms.

Many books and articles deal with specific families who bore heraldic arms. For information on how to find these publications, see the “Genealogy” and “Nobility” sections of this outline.

Grant-of-arms records are housed at the Genealogical Office, Dublin. Some have been microfilmed by the Family History Library. These are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - HERALDRY.

Most libraries have books on heraldry. Those available at the Family History Library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - HERALDRYENGLAND - HERALDRY

HISTORY

Efficient family research requires an understanding of the historical events that affected your ancestors and the records about them. Learning about wars, laws, migrations, settlement patterns, local events, and economic or religious trends may help you understand family movements. These events may also direct you to records, such as settlement certificates or military records, that mention your family. Learning about the conditions in which your ancestors lived and the events that influenced their lives will also help you understand your ancestors as human beings.

Events in Irish history that may have influenced your ancestors and the records about them include the following:

1002-14	Irish Kingdom. Brian Boru united Irish regional kings.
1200-50	British colonizing. English colonists were sent to colonize Ireland.
1494	The English crown officially claimed Ireland as part of England. Meetings and legislative drafts of the Irish parliament were subject to the control of the English king and council. But in 1496 Kildare, the lord deputy who had ruled Ireland before 1494, was reinstated.
1549-1640	Plantations. Many English and Scottish families were sent to Ireland to receive estates as rewards from the king. Lands were mainly granted in the counties of Leix, Offaly, Tipperary, Wexford, Leitrim, and Longford and in the major plantations in Ulster province. Some civil servants received lands in Munster province. Many Irish families were displaced.
1603	Scots began settling Ulster province.
1641-52	Irish Rebellion. Ulster natives overthrew English colonial rule, and Irish rebels established a Catholic government called the Confederation of Kilkenny.
1649	Oliver Cromwell crushed the rebellion in Ireland and awarded lands to Protestants. Catholics who could prove they had not been involved in the rebellion were given estates in West Clare. Some prisoners were sent to New England.
1690	The Irish Parliament was established in Dublin.
1720	British Parliament began to legislate for Ireland, and the British House of Lords had the powers of a supreme court in Irish law cases.
1782-93	Legislative acts gave power back to the Irish Parliament and more rights to Irish Roman Catholics.

1800	Ireland united with England and Scotland to form the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.
1821	The first genealogically useful census was taken.
1845	Civil registration of non-Catholic marriages began.
1845-49	Potato Famine. Blight destroyed the potato crop for several consecutive years resulting in starvation and disease. Millions died and millions emigrated.
1850-1914	Many Irish emigrated, which helped to stabilize the economy.
1850	The Reform Act was passed, basing the right to vote on occupation rather than on property ownership.
1858	The Principle Probate Registry began proving Irish probates.
1864	Civil registration of births and deaths began. Marriage registration began to include Catholics.
1869	The Church of Ireland ceased to be recognized as the state church.
1919-22	Civil strife resulted in 1,468 deaths. A treaty, signed on 7 January 1922, split Ireland into the predominantly Catholic Republic of Ireland and the predominantly Protestant Northern Ireland.
1922	Irish Civil War. Irregulars of the Irish Republican Army opposed to the 1922 treaty occupied the Four Courts building where many Irish records were housed. The building was burned and many records destroyed.

For key dates relating to church records, see the "Church History" section of this outline. For dates and records of other wars involving the Irish, see the England Research Outline. To find out when the various British rulers reigned, see:

Cheney, C. R., ed. Handbook of Dates. 1945. Reprint. London: Offices of the Royal Historical Society, 1955. (FHL book Ref 942 C4rg No. 4 computer number 0167991.)

A few comprehensive Irish histories include:

Foster, R. F. The Oxford Illustrated History of Ireland. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1991. (FHL book 941.5 H2hf.) This book provides a history of Ireland written in modern times.

Griffin, William D., ed. and comp. Ireland: A Chronology and Fact Book. Dobbs Ferry, New York: Oceana Publications, 1973. (FHL book 941.5 H2ir; computer number 0000233.) This book contains a lengthy time line of Irish history supplemented with transcripts of historical documents.

O'Donovan, John, ed. Annals of the Kingdom of Ireland: From the Earliest Times to the Year 1616. 1856. Reprint. 3d ed. 7 vols. Blackrock, Ireland: Edmund Burke Publisher, 1990. (FHL book 941.5 H2af; computer number 0615951.) This series provides a comprehensive history of early Ireland in Gaelic and English. It contains many dates of specific events, including the deaths of some individuals.

Local Histories

Local histories are particularly helpful in understanding the time, places, and conditions in which your ancestor lived. Local histories describe the economy; the prominent families; and the founding of churches, hospitals, schools, and businesses in an area. Even if a local history does not mention your ancestor, it may direct you to records that do.

For many localities, more than one written history exists. Local histories can be found in major research libraries, including the Family History Library. The Family History Library has many histories about Irish parishes.

The Family History Library has many national, county, and parish histories for Ireland as well as histories for specific time periods, groups, occupations, and localities in Ireland. Major research libraries may have similar histories.

Historical sources available at the Family History Library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - HISTORYIRELAND, [COUNTY] - HISTORYIRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH] - HISTORYGREAT BRITAIN - HISTORY

Bibliographies of Irish history available at the Family History Library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - HISTORY - BIBLIOGRAPHY.

LAND AND PROPERTY

Land records are valuable genealogical sources, because they may reveal where and when your ancestor lived; where your ancestor lived previously; family information, such as the names of children, heirs, spouse, other relatives, and neighbors; the occupation your ancestor pursued; other records that may mention your ancestor; and the progression of estate ownership or tenancy from one generation to another.

Deeds

Deeds are often valuable land records. Registration of deeds began in 1708. However, many did not register their deeds, because deeds had to be registered in Dublin and a fee was required. Marriage settlements, leases, mortgages, and wills are also found with deed registrations.

Two separate indexes to Irish deeds exist: surname and county. The surname index is arranged by grantor (seller or transferor of land). The county or land index is arranged alphabetically by county and then by the place-name (town or townland) within the county. Larger cities have their own indexes within the county index. Irish deeds and their indexes are stored at the Registry of Deeds in Dublin (Henrietta Street, Dublin 1, Ireland). For an excellent overview of records at the Registry of Deeds, see:

Begley, Donal F., ed. "The Registry of Deeds for Genealogical Purposes." In Irish Genealogy: A Record Finder (see the "For Further Reading" section).

Grenham, John. "The Registry of Deeds." In Tracing Your Irish Ancestors: The Complete Guide (see the "For Further Reading" section).

The Family History Library's copies of Irish deeds are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - LAND AND PROPERTYIRELAND, [COUNTY] - LAND AND PROPERTY

Estate Records

Estate records are another valuable set of property records. Most Irish lived on large estates owned by a minority of the population. Land owners usually hired agents to keep records of transactions involving their families and/or their tenants. Estate records vary in content and duration and may include deeds, leases, rent rolls, and account books, among other records. A brief explanation of estate records is found in "Land Records" in John Grenham, Tracing Your Irish Ancestors: The Complete Guide (see the "For Further Reading" section of this outline).

To locate estate records you need to know the name of the estate owner. If you can locate your ancestor in Griffith's Primary Valuation (see the "Taxation" section of this outline), you may also find the name of the owner of the estate your ancestor lived on.

Estate owners often lived away from their estates. Some lived in England. Many of the records of owners living in England have been deposited in English archives. The following sources identify some estate records and where they are deposited:

Irish Manuscripts Commission. Analecta Hibernica. Dublin: Stationery Office, 1930-. (FHL book 941.5 B2ah; computer number 0194681.)

Grenham, John. "County Source Lists." In Tracing Your Irish Ancestors: The Complete Guide (see the "For Further Reading" section).

Hayes's Sources.

National Inventory of Documentary Sources in the United Kingdom and Ireland.

Public Record Office of Northern Ireland. Report of the Deputy Keeper of the Records. Belfast: Her Majesty's Stationery Office, 1924-. (FHL book 941.5 A5rn; computer number 0362042.)

The Family History Library's copies of estate records are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - LAND AND PROPERTYIRELAND, [COUNTY] - LAND AND PROPERTY

LANGUAGE AND LANGUAGES

The native language of Ireland is Gaelic. You do not need to know Gaelic to do Irish research, however, because most records used in Irish research were begun in the late eighteenth or early nineteenth centuries and were written in English. The foreign language you may have to deal with is Latin. Government records were written in Latin until 1733, some Catholic Church records used Latin until the mid-nineteenth century, and older records written in English often latinized names and relationships. Some knowledge of Latin will help you read these records.

For help in reading Latin, see:

Ainsworth, Robert. Thesaurus Linguae Latinae Compendiarius: Ainsworth's Latin Dictionary. 1752. Reprint. London: Frederick Westly and A. H. Davis, 1836. (FHL book Ref 473 Ai65a 1836; film 599,788; computer number 0258012.) This is a Latin dictionary. Most libraries have a similar work.

Latin Genealogical Word List. Salt Lake City, Utah : The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1990. This publication provides translations of Latin words often used in genealogical records and is available from the Family History Library.

Martin, Charles T., comp. The Record Interpreter. 2d ed. Dorking, England: Kohler and Coombes, 1976. (FHL book Ref 422.471 M363re; computer number 0036587 cat 1910.) This book is a collection of abbreviations, Latin words, and names used in British historical manuscripts and records.

McLaughlin, Eve. Simple Latin for Family Historians. 3rd ed. Birmingham, England: Federation of Family History Societies, 1988. (FHL book Ref 478 M222s; computer number 453008.) This book lists Latin words that frequently appear in parish registers.

Spelling may make some records difficult to read. Prior to 1900, spelling was often phonetic. Family and place-names were often spelled as they sounded to the writer. And given names were often abbreviated.

Handwriting may also make records difficult to read. Writing styles have changed over time. With practice you should be able to decipher most of the difficult words and letters you will encounter in Irish records.

The meanings of words may also have changed over time, making some records difficult to understand. The following book can help you understand strange usages as it provides examples of British word usages in different time periods:

Murray, Sir James A. H., ed. Oxford English Dictionary. 13 vols. plus supps. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1933. (FHL book Ref 423 M964o; computer number 0222041.)

Other language helps available at the Family History Library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - LANGUAGE AND LANGUAGES.

MAPS

Maps are helpful in locating the places where your ancestor lived. They help you identify neighboring towns, parishes, and geographic features. They can help you locate parish churches. They can show the transportation routes that your ancestor could have used in moving.

Maps may be published separately or in bound collections called atlases. Maps may also be found in gazetteers, guidebooks, local histories, directories, and history texts.

Different types of maps provide different types of information. Historical maps describe economic growth and development, boundary changes, migration and settlement patterns, military campaigns, transportation developments, effects of plagues, and other historical information. Road maps provide information on highways, rivers, and town sizes. Other types of maps include parish, county, topographical, enclosure, civil district, church diocesan, and many more highly specialized maps.

City and street maps are extremely useful when researching in the records of large cities. Locating an ancestor's address on a city or street map may help you determine which parish to search.

The major source of Irish topographical maps since 1800 is the Ordnance Survey, which covered all of England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland. Maps were produced from the survey in series of 1 inch, 6 inches, and 25 inches to the mile. Series have been revised and published at different times. Ordnance Survey maps of greater detail (up to 10 feet to the mile) have been produced for most Irish cities. The following work explains the history of and details on the Ordnance Survey maps:

Harley, J. B. Ordnance Survey Maps: A Descriptive Manual. Southampton: Ordnance Survey, 1975. (FHL book 942 E3osa; computer number 172505.)

Using Maps

Maps must be used carefully because:

- Several places often share the same name. For example, more than seventy localities in Ireland are named Kilmore.
- The place-name on the map may not be spelled as expected.
- Parish boundaries are seldom indicated, so you cannot assume that a locality lies within a certain parish unless the map specifically shows that it does.

Finding the Specific Place on the Map

To be most effective in researching your Irish ancestor, you must identify the place in Ireland where your ancestor lived. Search gazetteers, histories, family records, and other sources to learn all you can about the place where your ancestor lived, including:

- The parish and county the place was in.
- The civil district your ancestor's parish was in (if your ancestor lived in the place after 1864).
- The name of the church where your ancestor was baptized or married.
- The names of other townlands in the parish.
- The names of nearby places, especially large cities.
- The names of places where related ancestors lived.
- Nearby geographical features, such as rivers and mountains.

This information will help you distinguish the place you are searching from other places of the same name.

See the “Gazetteers” section of this outline for additional information on locating places.

Finding Maps and Atlases

Collections of maps and atlases are available at numerous historical societies, county record offices, and public and university libraries. Major map collections in Ireland are housed at the Ordinance Survey Office.

Publications that can help you locate maps include:

Rural and City Maps. Typescript. Salt Lake City, Utah: Genealogical Department, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1985. (FHL book Reg 942 E73c; computer number 0357032.) This source lists British city maps not cited separately in the catalog.

Watt, Ian, comp. A Directory of U. K. Map Collections. 2d ed. London: McCarta, [1985?]. (FHL book Ref 942 E74w; computer number 0452346.) This source briefly describes the various British map repositories (including county record offices), their holdings, hours, and copying facilities.

The Family History Library has a growing collection of Irish maps and atlases. The library's Irish map collection includes:

Gardner, David E., Derek Harland, and Frank Smith, comps. A Genealogical Atlas of Ireland, Scale 1:300,000. Salt Lake City, UT: Deseret Book Company, 1964. (FHL book Ref 941.5 E3g; film 1,696,522 item 5; computer number 0048002.) This atlas includes an index to the places shown on its maps.

Ireland, Ordnance Survey. Irish Townland Survey, Scale 1:10,560. Ottawa: Ottawa Public Archives of Canada, 198-. (FHL fiche 6341635-66; computer number 0394562.) These maps are divided by county and include a grid map for each county and are not available for circulation.

Irish Townland Maps. Londonderry: Inner City Trust, 1989. (FHL fiche 6342438-53, 6343060-70; computer number 0511249.) Arranged by county, these maps show all Irish townlands within their respective parishes.

Irish County Maps Showing the Location of Churches. 4 vols. (One for each of the provinces of Munster, Leinster, Connaught, and Ulster.) Salt Lake City, Utah: Genealogical Department, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1976-77. (FHL book Ref 929.1 G286gs ser. A no. 54-57 1976-77; fiche 6020286, 6020301-3; computer number 0025342.) This set of county maps marks the locations of churches in Ireland.

Mitchell, Brian. A New Genealogical Atlas of Ireland. Baltimore: Genealogical Publishing Co., 1986. (FHL book Ref 941.5 E7m; computer number 0421741.) This book contains maps for each Irish county. The maps show civil parishes, baronies, and poor law unions.

MILITARY RECORDS

Military records identify individuals who served or were eligible to serve in the armed forces. From 1660 to 1922, the Irish were part of the British armed services. Consequently, pre-1922 records for Irish military personnel are mostly British. See the England Research Outline for a more detailed explanation of British military records.

The regular army and the navy constituted the major branches of the British military. Militia (part-time units for local defense), fencibles (full-time units for local defense), yeomanry (volunteer calvary units), territorial armies (units raised outside the British Isles for foreign service), coast guard (units that patrol British shores), and royal marines (troop units on ships) were also armed forces. Each of these services kept its own records.

Military officers were typically from the upper classes and soldiers were from among the poor. Compulsory draft was seldom used, except by the militia. The officers of each parish decided who would serve in the militia.

You may find evidence that your ancestor served in the military in family records, biographies, censuses, probates, civil registrations, or church records.

Military records are potentially of great genealogical value. But they are difficult to use because few are indexed and many are only available at the Public Record Office, Kew. Civil registration, census, or church records, if available, are easier records to use. Still, military records sometimes provide information that is not found in any other source. Search the easier records first; they will often provide information that will then help you search military records.

The Family History Library has many military records, but these are only a small part of the military records available. You may want to hire a researcher to search military records that are not available at the Family History Library.

Pre-1914 Records

Pre-1914 military records are kept in the Public Record Office, Kew and are divided into army and navy records.

Army Records. The army began as a permanent organization in 1660. Earlier armies were raised as needed, usually as county militia units directed by the county's lord lieutenant. For information on pre-1660 military records, see the handbooks described below.

Pre-1847 British army service was generally for life. Some soldiers were discharged early for disability (liberally defined) or age (often by age 40).

Army records before 1872 are organized by regiment. Records from 1872 through 1882 are arranged alphabetically by type of troop (calvary, infantry, etc.). Post-1882 records are arranged in a single alphabetical series.

Navy Records. The earliest surviving navy records are from 1617. Ships' logs survive from 1673, but usually only give information on ship location, weather, sightings of other ships, and shipboard events. While descriptions of shipboard events often include individual names, no indexes exist to help locate these names.

Until 1853, naval enlistment was informal and lasted for the ship's commission, usually three years. Seamen often alternated between the navy and the merchant marines. After 1853, seamen enlisted for the duration of their careers.

Before 1853, individual seamen (called ratings) were not mentioned in navy records other than musters, description books, or pay lists unless they deserted, misbehaved, or earned a medal.

Individual military units (regiments for the army, ships for the navy) kept records on their own personnel.

Twentieth Century Records

Post-1913 records are confidential. They are not available to the public. However, inquiries will be answered if the inquiry is accompanied by written permission of the next of kin.

Post-1913 army records are at the following address:

Army Records Centre
Bourne Avenue
Hayes, Middlesex UB3 1RF

Types of Military Records

Before you can use navy records or pre-1872 army records, you must determine the specific ship or regiment in which your ancestor served. "Strategies for Using Army and Navy Records," will help you accomplish that. Once you know your ancestor's ship or regiment, several types of military records may help you learn about your ancestor's age, birthplace, and military career. A few of these record types are described below. Others are described in the England Research Outline. As you search these records, be cautious in accepting the accuracy of the information you find. To enlist, underage boys may have lied about their name, age, and sometimes birthplace.

Muster Rolls. Muster rolls usually list individuals assigned to a ship or regiment on a given day, their ages (on joining), the date and place they joined, and possibly other information, such as their birthplaces (in sea musters since 1770) and dependents (in later army musters). Army musters exist for the years 1760-1878, navy musters for 1667-1878. Musters are held at the Public Record Office, Kew.

Chaplain's Returns and Regimental Registers. Chaplain's returns (1760-1971) list the baptisms, marriages, and burials of soldiers and their family members performed abroad by military chaplains. Regimental registers (1790-1924) contain birth, marriage, and death records by regiment for families of officers and enlisted men. Birth and baptism records are indexed. Chaplain's returns and regimental registers are available only by correspondence with the General Register Office.

Lists of Officers. Published annually, lists of officers provide an officer's name, rank, regiment or ship, and date of commission. For the army, the published version of these records is:

Great Britain, War Office. Army List. London: various publishers, 1754-. (FHL book 942 M25g; film 856,424-52; computer number 0000446 and others.) Volumes from 1765 on include indexes.

The published list of naval officers is:

Great Britain, Admirality. Navy List. London: various publishers. 1814-. (FHL book 942 M25gba; film 918,928-41 and 990,323-26; computer number 0118195.) The fully indexed Navy List names all commissioned officers, including masters, pursers, surgeons, chaplains, yard officers, coast guardsmen, and reservists who have served in the navy from 1814 to the present.

Continuous Service Engagement Books. Continuous service engagement books record the continuous service numbers assigned to navy ratings (seamen) since 1853. The records give the name, birth date, birthplace, physical description, and ship of service of each rating. Brief career details were later included as well. From 1872 to 1892, merchant seamen were also listed in these records.

Other Records. Other military records include description books; returns of service; and records of pensions, payrolls, promotions, medals, casualties, court martials, service, and desertions. These and other types of military records are explained in the handbooks at the end of this section.

Records of military service are at the Public Record Office, Kew. Some of the Public Record Office's military records as well as military records of various other repositories throughout Ireland and England are listed in Hayes's Sources under the subject index headings “Army,” “Navy,” “Military,” and “Militia.” Additional military documents may be found in private collections.

For more information on military records at the Public Record Office, see the Bevan and Duncan or Kew Lists handbooks listed at the end of this section.

Strategies for Using Army and Navy Records

It is difficult to locate information about your ancestor in military records without knowing the unit (ship or regiment) in which your ancestor served. If you do not know the ship or regiment already, you may find that information in other records, such as census, church, or family records.

You might find the following strategies helpful for finding your ancestor's ship or regiment:

Soldiers. If your ancestor was a soldier and he married, died, or had children after 1760 while in the army, he and the regiment to which he belonged may be listed in chaplain's returns or regimental registers. If you cannot identify your ancestor's regiment through these records, the sources you should search to determine his regiment will depend on what you know about your ancestor. If you know:

- The place and approximate date (1) of a campaign or battle in which your ancestor fought, (2) of one of his stations, or (3) that his wife gave birth while he was in the service, use John M. Kitzmiller II, In Search of the “Forlorn Hope,” 2 vols. (Salt Lake City, Utah: Manuscript Publishing Foundation, 1988; FHL book Ref 942 M2kj; computer number 0469639) to determine the regiment(s) that were stationed in that place at that time.

- The area where your ancestor lived during his late teens, use the handbooks below or regimental histories to determine which regiments were recruited in that area. Regimental histories available at the Family History Library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under GREAT BRITAIN - MILITARY HISTORY.
- The place he died after receiving an army pension, search the district pension returns for that area.
- That your ancestor was in the army in 1806, you may wish to search the return of all men (except commissioned officers) in army service as of 24 June 1806. While the 1806 return is indexed only by regiment, it is more complete and easier to search than other army records.

Army Officers. You can usually find records for army officers in the Army List. If your ancestor does not appear in the Army List for the right time period, consult the card index to officers which is available only at the Public Record Office, Kew. You may write the Public Record Office, Kew with the information you do know to obtain information from this card index.

If your officer ancestor was living during 1828 or 1829, check the indexed returns of service (see the England Research Outline).

Generally, there are separate records for staff officers, medical officers (surgeons), Commissariat officers, chaplains, Board of Ordnance officers (artillerymen, engineers, sappers, miners, artificers, and others), and other officers. Board of Ordnance officers may be included in the Army List, even though they kept their own records until 1855. All these officer records are held at the Public Record Office, Kew.

If you cannot find an officer's record for your ancestor after consulting the sources mentioned, follow the search strategies for soldiers.

If you think you have found the regiment in which your ancestor served, military histories may help confirm your findings. Most regiments have published histories that record the places where they served and the battles they fought. You can compare the information you know about your ancestor with the history of the regiment to determine whether your ancestor could have served in that regiment. A bibliography of regimental histories is:

White, Arthur S., comp. A Bibliography of Regimental Histories of the British Army. Dallington, East Sussex : Naval and Military Press Ltd., 1992. (FHL book 942 M23was; computer number 0666228.)

Many military and regimental histories are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under GREAT BRITAIN - MILITARY HISTORY.

Seamen. Navy records seldom mention individual seamen before 1853. If your ancestor served in the navy after 1853, search the index to continuous service engagement books. If he served before 1853, search the muster rolls, description books, or pay lists of the ship on which he served. If you do not know your ancestor's ship, the source you should search to determine the ship will depend on what you know about your ancestor. If you know:

- A port where your ancestor landed on a specific date, search the list books, Rodger, N. A. M., Naval Records for Genealogists), which provide a geographically arranged list of the ports where ships were located on certain dates. These books are available from 1673 on and are held at the Public Records Office, Kew.
- A battle or campaign in which your ancestor was involved, search medal rolls, also held at the Public Record Office, Kew.
- Your ancestor was onboard ship in 1861, search the 1861 Surname Index to Persons on Ships at Sea or in Port (Salt Lake City, UT: Family History Library of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1988; fiche 6025598; computer number 0506739).
- Your ancestor was on board ship in 1881, search the Surname Index to the 1881 Census of the Royal Navy (FHL fiche 6086362; computer number 0701445).
- The name of an officer serving with your ancestor, search the Navy List to determine the ship on which that officer served.

Naval Officers. Naval officers who served from 1695 to 1742 are listed in the following work:

Young, D. H. W., comp. Index to Commission and Warrant Books of the Admirality of Great Britain and Ireland, 1695-1742. London: Public Record Office, 1958-59; FHL film 824,516-17; computer number 0374247.) This index gives the officer's date of commission and a reference to additional information held at the Public Record Office, Kew.

Many officers are listed in published biographies, such as the following:

The Commissioned Sea Officers of the Royal Navy, 1660-1815. 3 vols. Typescript. Reduplication by Great Britain, Admirality, 1954. (FHL book 942 M23cs; film 908,026-27; computer number 0172791.)

For seamen serving as midshipmen (potential officers) between 1799 and 1854, the Midshipmen's Papers list birth dates and places and parents' names.

If your naval ancestor is not listed in any of the above sources, consult N. A. M. Rodger, Naval Records for Genealogists for other records or strategies you may use.

Many sources, list and describe naval ships and give the dates and places they were in service. One example is:

Colledge, James J. Ships of the Royal Navy. Annapolis, Md.: Naval Institute Press, 1987. (FHL book Ref 942 M3c; computer number 0510642.)

Use sources such as the above to learn more about ships on which you think your ancestor served to determine whether your ancestor could have been on those ships. Other naval histories are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under GREAT BRITAIN - MILITARY HISTORY.

NAMES, PERSONAL

Irish history has contributed to many variations in Irish names. Understanding these variations will help you as you trace your Irish ancestors.

Surnames

Irish surnames of Gaelic origin were commonly used until England laid claim to Ireland in the fifteenth century. Legislation under English rule led to the anglicization of many Irish names and to the adoption of many English names. Many different forms of Irish surnames resulted. For example, the Irish surname Houlihan or O'Houlihan may have taken on the anglicized form Holland.

Surname variations also resulted from an Irish form of patronymics that used the prefixes Mac'', meaning son of, and O'', meaning grandson of. Many descendants of Anglo-Norman invaders, who became assimilated into the Irish culture, also used patronymics but substituted Fitz' (as in Fitzgerald) for the prefix Mac'. English law, for a period of time, forbade the use of O' and Mac' in Irish surnames. Fitz was allowed. Not all members of Irish families chose to conform to English laws, hence several forms of a surname often emerged within a single family.

By the end of the nineteenth century, use of prefixes resumed. However, prefixes were added or dropped at will, again producing different surnames within the same family. Irish who emigrated during the nineteenth century often dropped the prefixes in their new countries of residence.

Some sources that can help you with Irish surnames include:

MacLysaght, Edward. The Surnames of Ireland. 6th ed. Dublin: Irish Academic Press, 1985. (FHL book Ref 941.5 D4mc 1985; computer number 0347166.)

Matheson, Sir Robert E. Special Report on Surnames in Ireland [Together with] Varieties and Synonyms of Surnames and Christian Names in Ireland. 1901. Reprint. Baltimore: Genealogical Publishing Co., 1968. (FHL book Ref 941.5 Dsma; computer number 0167712.)

Given Names

Irish given names are also Gaelic in origin and were affected by the same English influences. As with surnames, many given names were anglicized, producing many given name variations. Darby, Dermot, and Jeremiah, for example, are all variations of the same name.

Other challenges with Irish given names are (1) that some given names are used for both males and females—Florence, Sydney, and Evelyn for example—and (2) that some given names have nicknames that little resemble the original name. Delia, Phidelia, Bidelia, Biddie, and Bride, for example, are all used as nicknames for the name Bridget.

Two books that can help you with Irish given names are:

Coghlan, Ronan. Irish First Names. Belfast: Appletree Press, 1985. (FHL book 941.5 D4cri; computer number 0687400.)

Ó Corráin, Donnchadh, and Fidelma Maguire. Irish Names. 2nd ed. 1990. Reprint. Dublin: The Lilliput Press, 1992. (FHL book 941.5 D4og 1990; computer number 0687046.)

Other sources on Irish names available at the Family History Library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - NAMES, PERSONAL.

NATURALIZATION AND CITIZENSHIP

Naturalization is the process of granting the rights, protection, privileges, and responsibilities of native subjects to foreign immigrants. Irish naturalization required an act of Parliament. A less-expensive alternative to naturalization was denization, a process granting all the rights of a subject, except the right to inherit property or to hold public office. A denizen simply paid a fine (fee) and took an oath of allegiance. Generally, denization or naturalization was granted only to male adults.

No complete series of naturalization records exists, but the following sources list many of those who were naturalized or became denizens:

Lodge, John. "Denizations of the Irish, Scots, and Other Foreigners (Richard II - George I): Lists of Persons to Whom Grants of English Livery (Liberty) or Denization Were Made." National Archives, Dublin. Lodge Manuscripts. This manuscript lists people who became denizens of Ireland.

Lodge, John. "A List of Protestants Who in Pursuance of an Act of Parliament, 13 Charles II, for Encouraging Protestant Strangers and Others to Inhibit and Plant ye Kingdom of Ireland, Took the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy Whereby They Became Liege, Free and Natural Subjects of Ireland. . . ." National Archives, Dublin. Lodge Manuscripts. This manuscript lists people who were naturalized in Ireland. The information from this manuscript can be found in Brian W. Christmas, presenter, "Some Protestant Settlers in Ireland, 1662-1737," The Irish Genealogist 7, no. 3 (1988): 349-57 (FHL book 941.5 B2ig; computer number 0196356).

Shaw, William A., ed. "Letters of Denization and Acts of Naturalization for Aliens in England and Ireland, 1603-1800." In The Publications of the Huguenot Society of London. The Huguenot Society of London. (FHL book 942.1/L1 B4h; computer number 0176590.) Denization and naturalization records for 1603-1700 are found in volume 18 (Lymington: Chas. T. King, 1911) of the society's publications. Records for 1701-1800 are found in volume 27 (Manchester: Sherrat and Hughes, 1923) and in a supplement in volume 35 (Frome: Butler and Tanner, 1932).

Stewart, Rev. David, ed. Scots in Ulster, Their Denization and Naturalization, 1605-1634. Belfast: Presbyterian Historical Society. (Not at FHL.) These three pamphlets are at the Presbyterian Historical Society. They list Scots from the province of Ulster who received letters patent (open for public inspection) of denization or were naturalized by an act of Parliament between 1605 and 1634.

Few immigrants to Ireland went through the legal formalities of naturalization or denization and so most do not appear in naturalization or denization records. See the “Emigration and Immigration” section of this outline for other records on people who immigrated to Ireland.

The Family History Library's holdings of denization and naturalization records are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - NATURALIZATION AND CITIZENSHIP.

NEWSPAPERS

In comparison to other countries, Ireland was slow in developing a newspaper industry. An occasional newspaper was printed in the mid-1600s. Ireland's major city and provincial newspapers began in the 1700s. Town newspapers began by the 1800s.

Pre-1750 newspapers included very little local news or other news of genealogical value. By 1750 newspapers included notices of marriages and deaths with increasing frequency. Still, few notices of births were published. Newspaper advertisements published such useful genealogical information as:

- Changes in location or ownership of businesses.
- Disputes over property ownership.
- Notices of bankruptcies.
- Notices of claims against estates.

By the 1800s, notices of births, marriages, and deaths became both more numerous and more detailed than in earlier newspapers. Advertisements, in contrast, generally became less genealogically useful as family businesses declined.

The following books contain chapters that more fully discuss newspapers as genealogical sources:

ffolliot, Rosemary. “Newspapers as a Genealogical Source.” In Irish Genealogy: A Record Finder, edited by Donal F. Begley (see the “For Further Reading” section).

Grenham, John. “Newspapers.” In Tracing Your Irish Ancestors: The Complete Guide (see the “For Further Reading”) section.

Copies of Irish newspapers are maintained by many repositories and libraries, including:

- The British Newspaper Library. British Library, Catalogue of the Newspaper Library Colindale, 8 vols. (London: British Museum Publications, 1975; FHL book Q 942 A5cn; computer number 0182816) lists this library's newspaper holdings by town of publication. Volume two separately lists the library's Irish nwspaper holdings.
- The National Library of Ireland in Dublin. The National Library of Ireland, List of Newspapers on Microfilm (Typescript; FHL book Q 941.83/D1 A3n; film 990,403 item 7; computer number 0170368) provides a bibliography of the National Library's newspaper holdings.

Indexes of other Irish newspaper holdings include:

Crane, R. S., and F. B. Kaye. A Census of British Newspapers and Periodicals, 1620-1800. 2d ed. London: Holland Press, 1966. (FHL book 942 B3ce; computer number 0226560.) This book lists the Irish newspaper holdings of major U.S. libraries.

Newspapers in Microform: Foreign Countries. Washington, D.C.: Library of Congress, Catalog Publication Division, 1984. (FHL book 011.35 N479f 1983; computer number 0496878.) This source lists all reports from the foreign countries portion of Newspapers in Microfilm from 1948 to 1982, as well as reports received through 1983. This source is arranged by country and city and indexed by title.

North, John S. The Waterloo Directory of Irish Newspapers and Periodicals, 1800-1900. Waterloo, Ontario: North Waterloo Academic Press, 1986. (US/Canada Reference, FHL book Ref 941.5 B33n; computer number 0412814.) This book lists and describes Irish newspapers and periodicals from all fields and sometimes identifies their repositories.

The Family History Library has very few Irish newspapers. Those the library does have are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - NEWSPAPERSIRELAND, [COUNTY] - NEWSPAPERSIRELAND, [COUNTY], [CITY] - NEWSPAPERS

NOBILITY

The nobility is a class of titled people who often have special political and social privileges. The title of nobility is inherited or granted by the crown as a reward for performing a heroic deed or notable achievement or having a prominent political office.

The British nobility has a well-defined order. The highest noblemen are peers. They hold the titles (in descending rank) of duke, marquis, earl, viscount, and baron. The peers are followed in rank by the gentry, whose titles include (also in descending rank) baronet, knight, esquire, and gentleman. Both peers and gentry are entitled to coats of arms.

If your research confirms that your Irish ancestor was of the noble class, you may use a host of sources on Irish noble families in your genealogical research. The most useful indexes to published works on Irish nobility are those compiled by Marshall, Whitmore, and Barrow.

The most widely used sources on British nobility are those produced by Burke's Peerage Limited. Hundreds of editions of Burke's works have been published. One of these works is:

Burke, Sir John Bernard. A Genealogical and Heraldic History of the Landed Gentry of Ireland. 10th ed. London: Harrison and Sons, 1904. (FHL book 941.5 D22bu 1904; film 0101763 and 0990160 item 2; computer number 0168043.) Later editions of this book have also been published. The fifth edition is called Burke's Irish Family Records (London: Burke's Peerage, 1976; FHL book 941.5 D22bur 1976; computer number 0168055). Arranged alphabetically by surname, both editions give narrative pedigrees of Irish families and sample black and white coats of arms.

An index to Burke's publications is:

Burke's Family Index. London: Burke's Peerage Limited, 1976. (FHL book Ref 942 D53b; computer number 0149453.) This book is available in most major libraries.

Many of Burke's publications are available on film or fiche at the Family History Library. They are listed in the Author/Title Search of the catalog under BURKE, SIR JOHN BERNARD. Burke's works are extensive but should be used with caution as many of the pedigrees they provide are poorly documented and contain errors.

Pedigrees or other genealogical information on nobility are found in the following sources:

Betham, Sir William. Genealogical Abstracts [of Prerogative Wills of Ireland].

Burke, Sir John Bernard. Collection of Wills for Forming Irish Pedigrees.

Pedigree Index.

Published family histories may also contain information on your ancestor if he or she was part of the nobility. Family histories available at the Family History Library are listed in the Surname Search of the catalog under the major surnames mentioned in them.

Many other records on Irish nobles are available at the Family History Library. These are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

GREAT BRITAIN - NOBILITYIRELAND - NOBILITYIRELAND, [COUNTY] - NOBILITY

For more information on researching nobility, see the “Genealogy,” “Heraldry,” and “Probate Records” sections of this outline.

OCCUPATIONS

Knowing your ancestor's occupation may help you distinguish him or her from other individuals with the same name. Moreover, records associated with your ancestor's occupation may provide information about your ancestor's life and family. Some Irish occupational sources include:

- Records of freemen (businessmen who had special privileges, such as the right to vote), which are useful because they may list age, birthplace, parentage, and occupation.
- Service records of the Royal Irish Constabulary (a national police force), which provide each constable's name, age when appointed, native county, religion, physical description, and employment history. If a constable was married, information about his wife and children may also be included. The records are indexed and list several thousand men employed by the constabulary from 1816 to 1922.
- Alumni and member biographical sketches, which are often published by Irish, English, and Scottish schools and universities that train people for professional occupations (such as medicine, law, and theology). For more information on these sources, see the “Schools” section of this outline.
- Military records, which contain information about Irish who pursued careers in the armed services. For more information on these records, see the “Military Records” section of this outline.

For a listing of various occupations, the records about them, and the repositories where the records are kept, see:

Grenham, John. “Occupations.” In Tracing Your Irish Ancestors: The Complete Guide (see the “For Further Reading” section).

Hayes's Sources, the subject indexes.

For a definition of an occupation, see the Oxford English Dictionary.

To locate Irish occupational sources available at the Family History Library, look in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

PERIODICALS

A periodical is a magazine, newsletter, or journal published on a regular basis. In Ireland, periodicals are called journals. Journals are published by family history, local history, one-name (organized to study a specific surname), and national societies. Journal articles often include:

- Transcripts of church records, migration lists, and cemetery records.
- Suggestions on research procedures.
- Information about local records, archives, and services.
- Book advertisements and book reviews.
- Research advertisements.
- Researcher queries or requests for information about specific ancestors.

A few of Ireland's countrywide journals are:

The Irish Ancestor. 1969-1981. Published by the Irish Ancestor, the Glebe House, Fethard, County Tipperary, Ireland. (FHL book 941.5 B2i; computer number 0172915.) This journal publishes copies of will abstracts, church records, gravestone inscriptions, family Bible entries, and any other previously unpublished genealogical source.

Irish Family History. 1985-. Published by the Irish Family History Society, P.O. Box 36, Naas, County Kildare, Eire. (FHL book 941.5 H25if; computer number 0327883.) This journal contains articles on and extracts from Irish records.

The Irish Genealogist. 1937-. Published by the Irish Genealogical Research Society, Challoner Club, 59/61 Pont Street, London SW1X OBG, England. (FHL book 941.5 B2ig; computer number 0196356.) This journal contains record extracts as well as documented articles on families, repositories, and records.

Irish Roots. 1992-. Published by Belgrave Publications, Cork, Ireland. (FHL book 941.5 D25ir; computer number 0691983.) This journal contains articles on many topics, including surnames and new developments in Irish genealogy.

Many periodicals on Irish research are published outside of Ireland, such as the following:

The Irish Link. 1984. Published by the Irish Link, P.O. Box 135, South Melbourne, Victoria 3205, Australia. (FHL book 994 D25i; computer number 0438461).

The following two sources index Irish journals:

de Breffny, Brian. Bibliography of Irish Family History and Genealogy. This source indexes many Irish pedigrees and genealogies that have been published in periodicals.

Hayes's Sources. With separate person, subject, and place indexes, these volumes provide a comprehensive index to many Irish periodicals published before 1970.

Journals can be obtained from:

- The societies that publish them. The names and subscription addresses of many journals are provided in Ulrich's International Periodicals Directory (New York: Bowker, 1932-; US/Canada Reference, FHL book Ref 016.05 U7p; computer number 0026149), which is found in the Family History Library's US/Canada collection and is available at many major libraries.
- Archives with genealogical collections. These are likely to have journals for the area they serve.
- The Family History Library. The library subscribes to most journals published by genealogical and family history societies. Journals are listed in the Author/Title Search of the catalog under the name of the sponsoring society or journal. Journals are also listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under combinations of the following localities and subject headings:

POORHOUSES, POOR LAW, ETC.

In 1838, the Poor Law Act divided Ireland into 159 districts called poor law unions. A workhouse was established in each union to house the poor. Each union elected a board of guardians to administer poor law relief.

Records of the poor in Ireland are found in board of guardian minutes, in workhouse registers, and in the British Parliamentary Papers (unpublished). Information found in board of guardian minutes and workhouse registers may include names, dates of admission, places of birth or residence, ages, occupations, information about parents, testimony about conditions in the workhouse, and reports of disciplinary actions. Many of the minutes and registers are deposited in county libraries and national archives in Ireland.

The repositories of poor law records in Ireland are identified in chapter six of the following book:

Nolan, William. Tracing the Past: Sources for Local Studies in the Republic of Ireland. Dublin: Geography Publications, 1982. (FHL book Ref 941.5 A3nw; computer number 0177547.)

Irish poor law records available at the Family History Library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - POORHOUSES, POOR LAW, ETC.IRELAND, [COUNTY] - POORHOUSES, POOR LAW, ETC.

PROBATE RECORDS

Probate records are court records dealing with the distribution of a deceased person's estate. Probate records may give the deceased's death date; names, relationships, residences of heirs and guardians; and names of witnesses. Probate actions have been recorded in Ireland since the sixteenth century.

Not every person who died left probate records. Most wills were left by males with property. However, wills often list the names of the deceased's family and friends, so that many more people are listed in probate records than actually left them.

Some types of Irish probate documents are:

- Wills, which deal primarily with real property.
- Testaments, which deal primarily with movable property.
- Codicils, which are signed addenda to wills.
- Letters of administration or admons, which indicate that a person died without leaving a will so the court appointed an administrator to oversee estate distribution.
- Admons with will attached, which are produced when the executor named in the will is unable or unwilling to act as executor.
- Inventories, which list the belongings of the deceased person.
- Grant or act books, which provide day by day accounts of all actions taken in a probate court.

For a discussion of probate documents and their availability, see Rosemary ffolliott and Eileen O'Byrne, “Wills and Administrations” in Irish Genealogy: A Record Finder, edited by Donal F. Begley (see the “For Further Reading” section).

Pre-1858 Probate Courts in Ireland

Irish probates were handled by ecclesiastical courts from 1536 to 1858. Twenty-eight diocesan courts, known as consistory courts, existed. The highest court, with authority over all the ecclesiastical courts, was the Prerogative Court of Armagh. If a person had an estate that included property in more than one diocese and was worth more than £5, that person's will should have been proved in the Prerogative Court. The wills of wealthy people were usually proved in the Prerogative Court as well.

For a list of the diocesan courts and the counties over which each had jurisdiction, see:

Camp, Anthony J. Wills and Their Whereabouts. 4th ed. London: Anthony J. Camp, 1974. (FHL book Ref 942 S2wa; computer number 0192121.)

Irish Probates Register. Typescript. Salt Lake City, Utah: Family History Library, 1979. (FHL book Reg. 941.5 P2gs; computer number 0026060.)

Most pre-1858 probate records were destroyed when the Public Record Office in Dublin burned in 1922. Fortunately, prior to the fire, wills and admons had been indexed. Most of the indexes survived the disaster. Microfilm copies of the indexes are available at the Family History Library. They are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - PROBATE RECORDS - INDEXES.

Some of the indexes have also been printed in:

Phillimore, W. P. W., and Gertrude Thrift, eds. Indexes to Irish Wills. 1909-20. Reprint. Baltimore: Genealogical Publishing Co., 1970. (FHL book 941.5 P22i 1970; fiche 6036097 nos. 1-10; computer number 0484497.)

Prerogative wills of Ireland (wills tried in the Prerogative Court) have been indexed in:

Vicars, Sir Arthur, ed. Index to the Prerogative Wills of Ireland, 1536-1810. 1897. Reprint. Baltimore: Genealogical Publishing Co., 1967. (FHL book 941.5 P22v 1967; fiche 6026394; computer number 0173905.)

Most probate index entries give the name and residence of the deceased and the year of the probate. If you find a desired index entry, turn to the following sources to see if a copy of the probate record exists:

- Hayes's Sources. Hayes's volumes contain references to many wills found in various archives and libraries.
- Public Record Office of Northern Ireland. Card Index to Wills in the Several Collections Held at the Public Record Office, Belfast 1536-1920. This index was filmed by the Family History Library in 1990. The index lists many wills and other probate records found at the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland. The index is listed in the Locality

Search of the catalog under IRELAND - PROBATE RECORDS - INDEXES. Copies of the wills listed in the index can be obtained from the Public Record Office or can be viewed on microfilm at the Family History Library. The library's copies of the wills are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - PROBATE RECORDS.

- Ireland, Public Record Office. Testamentary Documents Card Index, Seventeenth to Twentieth Centuries. This card index lists wills and copies of wills that were collected after the destruction of the Public Record Office in 1922. These wills and copies of wills are now on file at the National Archives. The 1928 version of the index is published in Public Record Office, Dublin, The Fifty-Sixth Report of the Deputy Keeper of the Public Records and Keeper of the State Papers in Ireland (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1931; FHL book 941.5 A5r; film 0990493 item 8 and 0100239 item 4; fiche 6023597-602; computer number 0135706). In 1990, the Family History Library filmed the index. The index is listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - PROBATE RECORDS - INDEXES. Some copies of wills referenced in the index are also on film at the library. These are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - PROBATE RECORDS.
- Eustace, P. Beryl, ed. vol. 1, 1708-45 and vol. 2, 1746-85; and Eilish Ellis, ed. vol. 3, 1785-1832. Registry of Deeds, Dublin: Abstracts of Wills. Dublin: Stationery Office, 1954-. (FHL book 941.5 P22e; vols. 1 and 2 only are on film 896,887; computer number 0173903.) These volumes contain copies of the wills in the Registry of Deeds.
- Index to many abstracts and copies of wills in the Genealogical Office of Ireland. A copy of this index can be found in P. Beryl Eustace, comp., Index of Will Abstracts in the Genealogical Office, Dublin (Dublin: Stationery Office, 1948; FHL book 941.5 S2eu; film 990,430 item 4; computer number 0173903).
- Indexes and registers held by the Inland Revenue office, London of Irish wills and administrations proved between 1828 and 1879. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, Irish Will Indexes, 1838-79 (FHL film 597,268-72; indexes for 1862-63 are missing; computer number 0361537) records the name of the testator, the name and residence of the executor, the court in which the will was proved, and the folio number of the original will. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, Irish Administration Indexes, 1828-79 (FHL film 597,278-81; indexes for 1830-31 and 1851 are missing; computer number 0361537) gives the name and sometimes residence of the deceased, the name and residence of the administrator, the name of the court where the administration was granted, and the folio number of the original administration. Many of the will and admon registers on which the indexes are based are also available. The registers for the years 1828 to 1839 are summaries of the originals. The registers from 1840 to 1879 are missing. The existing registers contain names and relationships of heirs and often the death date of the deceased. The registers and indexes are on film at the Family History Library. They are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - PROBATE RECORDS.
- Irish estate duty wills. Irish wills proved in English courts between 1812 and 1857 were subject to an estate duty tax. Abstracts of these wills were kept at the Estate Duty Office in London but have since been transferred to the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland. Abstracts for the years 1812-1820 and part of the list for 1821 no longer exist. Surviving copies begin in 1821 and are alphabetized beginning with the letter k. Filmed copies of the surviving abstracts are available at the Family History Library. They are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - PROBATE RECORDS.

There are several other collections of will and administration abstracts compiled by various genealogists and organizations. These collections include:

Betham, Sir William. Genealogical Abstracts [of Prerogative Wills of Ireland]. Dublin: Public Record Office. (FHL film 595,939-45; 596,139-40; computer number0359366.) This source is arranged alphabetically.

Betham, Sir William. Volume of Abstracts of Grants of Administration, Prerogative, 1595-1802. This set of notebooks is at the National Archives. It is not arranged alphabetically. The Genealogical Office has a version that is arranged alphabetically. The Family History Library has a microfilm copy of this alphabetical version, Prerogative Court Records, Dublin, Ireland (FHL film 100114 item 2; computer number 0426918).

Burke, Sir John Bernard. Sir Bernard Burke's Collection of Wills for Forming Irish Pedigrees. 42 vols. Belfast: Public Record Office of Northern Ireland. (FHL film 227,866-900.) This collection is indexed (FHL film 227,866-69; computer number 0337889).

Clare, Wallace. Abstracts from Some Irish Wills. (FHL film 477,000 item 2; computer number 0358791.) This book provides abstracts of some wills held in the Public Record Office, Kew. It is indexed.

Other collections of will abstracts are described in Wills and Their Whereabouts.

Many Irish wills were probated in English courts, especially the Prerogative Court of Canterbury and the Prerogative Court of York. See the England Research Outline for more information on English courts and their records.

Post-1857 Probate Courts

In 1858, government courts began to prove wills and administrations. Eleven district will registries and a Principal Probate Registry in Dublin replaced the church probate courts.

Each registry made copies of wills and administrations that it proved and sent the originals to Dublin. The originals, all records of the Principal Probate Registry, and all probate records for the counties of Dublin and Kildare were destroyed in the fire at the Public Record Office in 1922.

Copies of wills and administrations kept by other district registries have been gathered into the National Archives and the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland, where they remain grouped by district. To determine the district registry that served your county of interest, see the Irish Probates Register or Anthony Camp, Wills and Their Whereabouts.

For the years 1858-1920 there is a calendar (annual index) of the grants of probate and letters of administration made in the Principal Probate Registry and in the several district registries. Produced by the Principal Probate Registry, Dublin, this calendar is arranged alphabetically by the name of the testator. For each entry the calendar tells the testator's name; the executor's name; the court where the will was registered; and the deceased person's name, occupation, death date, and death place.

For the years 1858-1877 a master index to the above calendar references probates from all courts. Arranged by surname, the index gives the name of the deceased, the district registry where the probate was proved, and whether the probate involved a will or an admon. To find the film numbers for the Irish calendar and master index, select the calendar by Ireland, Principal Probate Registry (Dublin) in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - PROBATE RECORDS - INDEXES.

If you are searching for a will proved between 1858 and 1877, look first at the master index. If you are looking for a will proved after 1877, go directly to the calendar. These sources will tell you the district registry where the will was proved. Once you identify the district registry, you can search that district's records. Each district has its own index giving the page number of the original will. District records, including indexes, that are available at the Family History Library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - PROBATE RECORDS.

Other records that may provide information from a will or administration include the Irish Will Indexes, 1838-79 and corresponding registers and Irish Administration Indexes, 1828-79 and corresponding registers. Both indexes list the name of the deceased, the name and residence of the executor or administrator, the court in which the will was proved, and the folio number of the original record. Some of the registers (those from 1840 to 1879) on which the indexes are based are missing. Available registers provide the names and relationships of heirs and often the death date of the deceased. The Family History Library has copies of the available indexes and registers. These are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - PROBATE RECORDS.

SCHOOLS

School records, including alumni lists, may contain valuable information about your ancestor, including name, birthplace, residence, and father's name and occupation.

The main Irish college, Trinity College in Dublin, is a Protestant college but was attended by some Catholics. Brief biographies of Trinity College alumni appear in:

Burtchaell, George Dames, and Thomas Ulick Sadleir, eds. Alumni Dublinenses 1593-1843. London: Williams and Norgate, 1924. (FHL book 941.83/D1 J2u; film 990,388 item 2; computer number 0018597.)

Most school records remain in local custody, though a small collection of school records for the Republic of Ireland is held at the National Archives.

Northern Ireland school records and their Family History Library call numbers (when applicable) are listed in the following:

Register of School Registers Held by the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland, Belfast. Salt Lake City, Utah: Family History Department, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 1987. (FHL book Ref 941.5 J2rs; computer number 0464335.)

If your ancestor received professional training, he or she may have attended school in another country. Many Irish professionals were trained in other countries. For example, Anglican ministers were often trained in England, doctors in Scotland, and Catholic priests in France and Italy. Therefore, if you cannot find Irish school records for your professionally trained ancestor, you may want to check school records of other countries.

The many Irish school records available at the Family History Library are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - SCHOOLSIRELAND, [COUNTY] - SCHOOLSIRELAND, [COUNTY], [PARISH or CITY] - SCHOOLS

SOCIETIES

Historical and genealogical societies may have valuable genealogical information on your ancestor. Some societies focus on a specific area, region, family line, or name, while others deal with all of Ireland. Many publish helpful journals, transcripts, and compiled genealogies. Some publish queries about Irish ancestors or maintain lists of members' research interests. Some have special indexes, collections, and projects. Many are based in countries to which Irish immigrated, such as the United States or Australia. You may want to join and support the efforts of one of these societies.

The names and addresses of these societies are listed in:

Grenham, John. “Research Services, Societies and Repositories.” In Tracing Your Irish Ancestor: The Complete Guide (see the “For Further Reading” section).

Ryan, James. Irish Records (see the “For Further Reading” section).

For more information about the publications of these societies, see the “Periodicals” section of this outline.

One-Name Groups

Some societies gather information about individuals with a particular surname. If you would like to find out about or join such a group, contact the following organization:

Locating Records at the Family History Library

The Family History Library has many sources compiled by Irish genealogical societies. These sources are described in the Author/Title Search of the catalog under the society's name. Copies of some records gathered by Irish genealogical societies are also listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the record type. For example, cemetery transcripts compiled by a local family history society are listed in the Locality Search under IRELAND, [COUNTY] - CEMETERIES.

Societies' histories or lists of members' interests are indexed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - SOCIETIESIRELAND, [COUNTY] - SOCIETIES

Lists of and guides to societies' collections are indexed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - ARCHIVES AND LIBRARIESIRELAND - [COUNTY] - ARCHIVES AND LIBRARIESIRELAND - [COUNTY] - [CITY, TOWN, OR PARISH] - ARCHIVES AND LIBRARIES

TAXATION

In most countries, tax records are difficult to locate, are rarely indexed, and give limited information. They are usually searched only after other sources have been exhausted. However, because so many Irish records (including tax records) were lost in 1922 when the Public Records Office burned, surviving tax records are particularly significant to Irish research.

Tax records are useful in Irish research because they reveal an individual's place of residence at a given time. As mentioned, knowing place and date of residence is extremely helpful in Irish research.

Irish tax records fall into two classes: pre- and post-1661 records. Pre-1661 records are of taxes created under the English feudal system and extracted by the crown. Post-1661 records are of taxes assessed and extracted by the local districts.

Many types of Irish taxes were assessed prior to the nineteenth century. The most important Irish tax records, however, are Tithe Applotment books and Griffith's Primary Valuation. Both are nineteenth-century sources and serve, to some extent, as census substitutes. Both are extremely useful in locating people and identifying the townland and parish in which they lived. Griffith's Primary Valuation can also be used to determine names of estate owners, making it possible to access estate records (see the “Land and Property” section of this outline).

Tithe Applotment Books

The tithe was a land-based tax exacted from rural Ireland between 1823 and 1837. The tax did not apply to inhabitants of the cities or larger towns. Though taken from people of all faiths, the tithe was used to support the Church of Ireland in rural areas. Tithe Applotment books record the name of the head of the household and the value of the property.

Griffith's Primary Valuation

Between 1848 and 1864, a valuation, called Griffith's Primary Valuation, was made of taxable property in every parish in Ireland. The valuation records list the name of the head of the household, the name of the landowner, the acreage of the plot, the value of the property, and the amount of tax assessed. The tax based on the property valuation was used to support the poor.

Valuation Books

After the primary valuation, later valuations were made throughout Ireland approximately every decade. Changes in ownership or tenancy as well as the types of information recorded in the original valuation (name of the head of the household, name of the landowner, acreage, and property value) were noted in the valuation books.

For more information on Tithe Applotment records, Griffith's Primary Valuation, and other valuation sources, see:

Grenham, John. “Land Records.” In Tracing Your Irish Ancestors: The Complete Guide. (See the “For Further Reading” section).

McCarthy, Tony. “Twelve Major Sources.” In The Irish Roots Guide (see the “For Further Reading” section).

For more information about Irish taxes and surviving tax records, see:

Falley, Margaret. Irish and Scotch-Irish Ancestral Research. (See the “For Further Reading” section).

The Family History Library's copies of Tithe Applotment books and Griffith's Primary Valuation are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - LAND AND PROPERTY.

Other valuation records are listed in the Locality Search under IRELAND, [COUNTY] - LAND AND PROPERTY.

The library's other taxation records are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under the following headings:

IRELAND - TAXATIONIRELAND, [COUNTY] - TAXATIONIRELAND, [COUNTY], [TOWN or PARISH] - TAXATION

Indexes

The following work was compiled by the staff at the National Library, Dublin, and is available at the Family History Library. Arranged by county, this index lists surnames found in the Tithe Applotment records and in Griffith's Valuation:

An Index of Surnames of Householders in Griffith's Primary Valuation and Tithe Applotment Books. 14 vols. Typescript. Dublin: National Library, 1960-70. (FHL book Ref 941.5 R22i 14 vols.; film 919,001-7; computer number 0316279.) This work is often referred to as the Householders Index.

A brief aid produced by the Family History Library, The Ireland Householders Index (item 34070), contains step by step instructions on how to use the Householders Index and its corresponding records. This aid is available at the library and through Family History Centers.

The Irish Land Commission has produced an index to the Tithe Applotment records for the counties in Northern Ireland: Northern Ireland, Public Record Office, Land Commission Archive index. This index is listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - LAND AND PROPERTY - INVENTORIES, REGISTERS, CATALOGS.

Several indexes, by full name, to the Griffith's Primary Valuation records for specific counties have also been compiled and are available on microfiche at the Family History Library. These indexes cannot be circulated to Family History Centers. The indexes are listed in the Locality Search of the catalog under IRELAND - LAND AND PROPERTY - INDEXES.

OTHER RECORDS FOR IRELAND

Only the most significant Irish records are discussed in this outline. Many other types of Irish records that contain genealogical information are available at the Family History Library. IRELAND GENEALOGY HANDBOOKS

ANCESTRY NEWSLETTER. Vol. VI, No. 5 (Sept-Oct1988).

Brighter Skies Forecast for Irish Researchers

by John D. Rugg

When my wife and I were last in Ireland – she is Boston Irish and, because at least one of her grandparents was born in Ireland, close enough to the ould sod to claim dual Irish-American citizenship – we discovered a possible Murphy cousin in County Cork. "We Irish never cared about our roots," he told us, "until you Americans came over to look for yours. Now we're looking too."

We were fortunate with our Murphy search in knowing the exact County Cork parish from which the Murphy ancestor, my wife's grandmother, had come. We found her baptismal record. Most Americans of Irish descent are not so lucky, knowing only that an ancestor came from Ireland. As it happened, in the case of "our" Murphys, even identification of the right parish was not quite enough for clear sailing, there being several families there with the Murphy surname (as tends to be the case throughout Ireland).

For those whose Irish root names are less common than Murphy – I, for example, know only that my great-grandfather Devlin was of Irish birth and that Devlin is a County Tyrone name – the increased interest of Ireland in digging roots is bearing fruit. Local people throughout the thirty-two counties of both parts of divided Ireland are hard at work uncovering old records (mainly parish registers) and indexing them to make the data available to interested searchers at home and abroad. That work holds out more hope today than perhaps at any other time since the troubles that began in 1921 destroyed so many precious records in Dublin.

Spurred in great part by efforts to create jobs for young Irish men and women, projects are going strong throughout the Emerald Isle to locate and copy old vital records of baptisms, marriages, and burials. When transcribed, such finding tools for our Irish ancestry are being indexed and, in some cases, put into a county-wide computer data base for ready search and reference. To date, most of Ireland's thirty-two counties are getting at least some attention of this kind.

Perhaps the prototype of these projects is the Clare Heritage Center, which was established several years ago in Corofin, County Clare, by a retired schoolmaster named Ignatius Cleary. Working with a group of willing volunteers, Cleary began by borrowing all the Clare parish registers he could lay his hands on and transcribing them. Following that the task was to index them (some half-million baptismal and marriage cards) and to identify family groups among them. In 1976 an old Corofin Protestant Church building was donated to house the heritage center, its exhibits, maps, and rapidly growing records of Clare people of the past. Today the Clare center reports that all of the available nineteenth-century church records for County Clare have been indexed and each parish's families reconstituted. Included are forty-six Clare parishes and the adjoining parish of St. Mary's in the city of Limerick, which is in County Limerick.

One result of the County Clare project was to establish a ranking of the twenty most common surnames found in the county before 1900, ranging from McMahon (the most common with 2,320 families) through McNamara, Maloney, O'Brien, McInerny, Ryan, Kelly, Keane, O'Connor, O'Halloran, Hogan, Lynch, Murphy, Burke, O'Loughlin, Walsh, Hehir, O'Donahue, and McCarthy to Callinan (only 511 families). In the adjacent Limerick parish of St. Mary's, many but not all of the same surnames appear in the top twenty; they are joined by Hayes, Fitzgerald, O'Connell, O'Sullivan, O'Neill, and Kennedy, which in Limerick city replace Maloney, McInerny, O'Loughlin, Hehir, O'Donahue and Callinan in the top twenty.

Happily for those whose Irish ancestors did not happen to come from County Clare, the Clare Heritage Center is not unique. Although not so old nor perhaps so far along, there are similar centers or active groups in at least twenty-one counties of the Republic of Ireland and three or four in Northern Ireland's six counties. In about five counties there is a facility called a heritage center; in other counties the group is the county library or historical society. Some of the groups (with HC for Heritage Center, CL for County Library, HS for Historical Society) are as follows:

Armagh: Rev. S.J. Clyne, Diocesan Secretary, Ara Coeli, Armagh BT61 7QY, Northern Ireland

Carlow HC, c/o Michael Purcell, 4 Kennedy Street, Carlow, Ireland

Clare HC, Corofin, Co. Clare, Ireland

Cork HC, PO Box 17, Bandon, Co. Cork, Ireland

Derry (Londonderry): Research Center, 15 Magazine Street, Londonderry BT48 6HH, Northern Ireland

Down: Ulster Historical Foundation, 66 Balmoral Avenue, Belfast BT9 6NY, Northern Ireland

Dublin Family History Society, c/o Richard Flatman, 36 College Drive, Templeoge, Dublin 6, Ireland

Galway Family History Society, c/o Nuala Silk, 46 Maunsells Park, Galway, Ireland

Kerry Genealogical Center, c/o John Griffin, Town Hall, Prince Quay, Tralee, Co. Kerry, Ireland

Kildare CL, Newbridge, Co. Kildare, Ireland

Kilkenny HS, Rothe House, Kilkenny, Ireland

Leitrim HC, County Library, Ballinamore, Co. Leitrim, Ireland

Limerick, c/o Dr. Chris O'Mahony, Midwest Archives, 104 Henry Street, Limerick, Ireland

Mayo Family Research Society, Bushfield House, Hollymount, Co. Mayo, Ireland

Offaly HS, Charleville Road, Tullamore, Co. Offaly, Ireland

Roscommon HS, Strokestown, Co. Roscommon, Ireland

Sligo Family Research Society, Castle Street, Sligo, Ireland

Tipperary Heritage Unit, Tipperary Community Council, Marian Hall, Tipperary, Ireland and Nenagh District HC, Governor's House, Nenagh, Co. Tipperary, Ireland

Waterford Heritage Survey, St. John's College, Waterford, Ireland

Westmeath CL, Athlone, Co. Westmeath, Ireland

Wicklow: Bray Town Hall HC, Bray, Co. Wicklow, Ireland

Tyrone: Irish World Citizen Organization, 26 Market Square, Dungannon, Co. Tyrone BT70 1AB, Northern Ireland

New centers are coming into existence from time to time, as local efforts bear fruit or find funds. For counties not mentioned, or for those researchers who do not know their ancestors' county of origin, a good single point of contact for all Irish counties (whether in the Republic of Ireland or in Northern Ireland) is the Irish Family History Society (IFHS), Charleville Road, Tullamore, Co. Offaly, Ireland, which shares quarters with the Offaly Historical Society. IFHS's John Kearny will attempt to put searchers in touch with the proper person or group in the proper county wherever possible. As with any group, members have a right to expect a bit more than those who are not; IFHS membership is currently $12 annually (8 Irish pounds) and may be paid in United States funds by check to IFHS at the Tullamore address. Requests which require an answer must be accompanied by at least two International Postal Coupons, more may also be needed if any correspondence within Ireland is necessary. A simple research request should include a check for at least $15, although $5 plus postage may be enough for looking up a single birth or similar record. IFHS membership includes an annual journal, which carries a Members Interest List (which in the United States would be called a list of queries) and other articles of genealogical interest.

Another recent development of promise is the information in Tullamore of the Irish Family History Council, staffed by some IFHS officials and others, which shares, temporarily, the same Charleville Road address. The new council's membership includes representatives of genealogical societies and government agencies concerned with records, youth employment, and tourism.

Its objectives promise to bring more genealogy to Ireland and more help in ancestral research to those of Irish descent in all parts of the world. In addition to other goals, the council plans to develop a model for a county genealogical center and to design a standardized computer module for support of such a center. It will attempt to select and designate one such center for each county. It intends to establish and maintain contact with professional genealogists and genealogical societies within Ireland and abroad. It aims to interest private companies and tourism groups in the value of assistance to an Ireland-wide search for roots in Eire by Americans, Britons, Canadians, Australians, New Zealanders, and peoples of many other nationalities who share Irish ancestry.

Indeed, things are looking up (no pun intended) in Ireland for those of us with Irish blood who seek to establish or strengthen the "Irish Connection." Perhaps it is not too starry-eyed to dream of a time when an ancestor's name can be punched into a central Irish computer data base to uncover that maddeningly elusive Irish townland or parish from which they came.

John D. Rugg holds an MLS From Brigham Young University and an MA from the University of Texas at Austin. He was recently named Historian of the Year by the Granville Historical Society.

Erin Research: It Takes More Than the Luck o' the Irish

by James G. Ryan, Ph.D.

Searching for Irish ancestors is made difficult by the relative scarcity of records for some periods (e.g., the eighteenth century) and for some social classes. Relative to other European countries, comprehensive national records such as censuses and birth, marriage, and death records are sparse. There are many reasons for this. Church records, an important source of genealogical information, are limited because the Roman Catholic Church, to which most of the population belonged, was proscribed during the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. Consequently, valuable records of birth, marriage, and death were not usually kept. Also, a significant proportion of the records of the Church of Ireland, to which most of the remaining population belonged, were destroyed in a fire in Dublin's Public Record Office in 1921.

The result is that availability of Irish records is variable. From 1864 onward, the availability of records is good. In that year, the certification of births, marriages, and deaths began for the entire population. The earliest census data, however, is from 1901. Although a census was taken every ten years, the records for 1871 through 1891 were destroyed by order of the governments of the time to protect confidentiality. The returns for the earlier years were destroyed in the above-mentioned Public Record Office fire. Records exist for virtually all Roman Catholic churches in that period. Church of Ireland records are not extant in all cases; around one third of all these records were destroyed in the Public Record Office fire of 1921. There are also excellent commercial and social directories, newspapers, and other incidental records that may help the researcher circumvent the destroyed or lost records.

From around 1820 to 1864, the records are available but patchy. During that time Roman Catholic churches began to flourish and keep good records. Two surveys of landholders were made, and Church of Ireland marriages were recorded onword from 1845. There is also a relatively good range of commercial and social directories available.

Before the 1820s, and particularly in the mid eighteenth century, records are very sparse. Indeed, bridging this gap, the "silent century" as it is sometimes called, is a major problem in Irish family history.

Because of this scarcity of records, every possible source of family information is of potential value to the researcher of Irish family history. There is thus more attention paid to lesser local sources than might be justified elsewhere in European research. A significant force in the collection and indexing of this local information has been the local heritage centers (or family history centers). These centers have arisen during the last ten years – particularly the last five. A heritage center is an archive which holds records, documents, and other information (e.g., family histories of the area) and artifacts relating to the heritage of the county.

Typically, one heritage center serves one county (Ireland has thirty-two counties of which twenty-six are in the Irish republic). However, some large counties (e.g., Tipperary) have several centers, while other counties have none. Heritage centers generally aspire to containing all of the records relevant to the heritage of the county. Almost all of the centers are primarily concerned with family history records, while some also give emphasis to other aspects of local heritage, such as archaeology, architecture, and natural and social history.

The emergence of these local centers is indicative of the fact that Irish family record searching is perhaps best handled on a local basis rather than through reliance on larger national data bases. Sources such as Griffith's Valuation Survey, certificates of birth and marriage, and census data are obviously the "bones" of all family searches. However, local information such as gravestone inscriptions, local newspapers, and estate records can provide the detail from which the real lives of people can be defined rather than seen as merely vital statistics.

Awareness of the growing interest in sources of information at a county level led to the preparation of a new Ancestry publication, Irish Records: Sources for Family & Local History, by James G. Ryan, Ph.D. This book presents the records available for each county in Ireland under the following headings:

Censuses and Census Substitutes
Church Records (Church of Ireland, Presbyterian, and Roman Catholic) Commercial and Social Directories Family History
Gravestone Inscriptions
Newspapers
Wills and Administrations
Miscellaneous Sources
Research Sources and Services

A county of particular note this year is Dublin, which is celebrating its 1000th birthday. To mark the occasion Flyleaf Press of Dublin has released A Guide to Tracing Your Dublin Ancestors, which details the family records available for the city and county. The address of Flyleaf Press is 4 Spencer Villas, Glenageary, Co. Dublin, Ireland.

James G. Ryan, holds a Ph.D. from University College, Dublin, and is currently a science administrator with the Irish government's Science & Technology Agency.

HOW TO USE THE RECORDS OF THE REPUBLIC OF IRELAND

By

Margaret C. Griffith

I. Introductory

The genealogical student in the course of his researches has occasion to visit record collections of all kinds, collections which have been brought together for a variety of purposes, and which therefore require different kinds of approach. Some are general archive collections, some are what we may call "one-purpose" archives, collected or produced by a single agency for its own particular purposes. Here in Salt Lake City there exists a very highly developed one-purpose archive, that purpose being genealogical study. In such a collection the genealogist will find that everything has been planned to meet the needs of his own particular type of research, and to make use of its facilities will be a comparatively simple matter. But elsewhere he may be dealing with archive institutions whose purpose is not primarily genealogical, perhaps with general archives, or with one-purpose archives formed for a quite different use. The documents have been compiled for various administrative purposes, and their use as genealogical material is incidental. The task of the genealogist is in that case a much more complicated one; he cannot expect to find a single indexing system which, on being presented with particulars of his earliest known ancestor, will come back with a neat, computerized collection of all the stored data about the family. His approach must be far more laborious and requires long preparation. He cannot hope to extract everything possible from the record collections he is going to use unless he thoroughly understands their original purpose and the functions of the agency which produced them. Before he undertakes original research, particularly research abroad, it is important for him to prepare himself in this way, not only by collecting all the information that is available at home, but also by finding out all that he can about the record collections with which he is going to have to deal and the various types of record which they contain. He must go over the facts which he already possesses, and decide which of these records can be linked up with them in order to lead to new information. When he approaches the record-keepers in the institutions which he hopes to use, he must be able to ask questions which are relevant to their records, questions which can be answered. He must know where the information he wants is likely to be found and concentrate his researches on that point, thus saving himself much unnecessary correspondence, or perhaps considerable sums in hotel bills for unnecessarily prolonged stays. It is the object of this paper to give some such general idea of the principal record repositories in the Republic of Ireland, and the types of record available which are most likely to be of use to the genealogist.

But before the student actually sets out for Ireland or contacts any Irish record repository, it is important that he should be sure that he has obtained all the information he can which is available in print, and in particular that he has done everything possible to pinpoint the family's place of origin in Ireland, and this should be done in detail, getting down, if possible, to the smallest territorial unit, the townland (which is an area of anything from about 300 to 400 acres), or to the parish. If he has a place name and does not know to what type of territorial unit it refers, he can probably find out if he can get hold of a copy of the government publication known as the "Townland Index", which is an index of place names issued in connection with the census of 1901, and which is one of the indispensable tools of the genealogical researcher. It gives townlands, parishes, baronies (this is a larger unit than the parish; there are from five to nineteen per county), and also the old electoral divisions, though these last do not greatly concern the genealogist. With the location of the family known, he can start in earnest on his researches. Two other publications will be essential to him before he starts on manuscript work. One is, of course, the Index to Manuscript Materials for the History of Irish Civilization, prepared by Dr. R. J. Hayes, formerly Director of the National Library, in which these materials, drawn from all over the world, are arranged under personal names, place names, dates and subjects. It is not exclusively a genealogical guide, but a general historical one, and as such it includes genealogical sources, and it is now the starting point for all manuscript research into subjects of Irish interest. He should also, if he possibly can, spend some time in familiarizing himself with Mrs. Margaret D. Falley's two-volume guide to Irish genealogical study, "Irish and Scotch-Irish Ancestral Research, which contains not only a survey and evaluation of teh known materials and an account of the various record institutions, but also extensive bibliographies, including a list of about 340 published family histories. Although practically all published material of any importance to the student of Irish genealogy is mentioned somewhere or other in Mrs. Falley's work, I have added to this paper a short select bibliography, covering published editions, lists, indexes and summaries, of some of the series of Irish records most likely to be of use.

II. The General Register Office

And now, turning to the Irish record repositories themselves, I will begin with the General Register Office of Births, Deaths and Marriages, located on the North bank of the river Liffey eastwards from the city centre, one of Dublin's greatest architectural glories (now unfortunately hidden by a railway bridge and dwarfed by what to us is a skyscraper). I begin with this institution because this is the collection of records to which one's approach is the most straightforward. It is a one-purpose archive whose object is the recording of information about individuals simply as such--not as taxpayers, property-owners, insurees, or any particular category, but simply as human beings going through the three basic experiences, birth, marriage and death--so its purpose tallies almost exactly with that of the genealogical researcher, and to use its facilities is a simple matter. You need to know beforehand simply the scope of its records, the fees charged, and what the office staff can do for you and what you must give them in the way of data before they can help you.

First of all for the most discouraging fact. Public registration of births, deaths and marriages did not begin in Ireland until 1864 (with the exception of Established Church, i.e. Protestant Episcopal marriages, which were registered from 1845 onwards), and, as Mr. Henchy shows in his paper, the great flood of emigration to the United States had begun long before that. Most of the letters which reach me in the Public Record Office asking for help in tracing ancestors, do unfortunately often give a date well before 1864 for the arrival of the earliest known Irish ancestor on this side of the Atlantic. But Certainly, if you know from your first American ancestor's age at death that he was born in Ireland after 1864, your first step will be to look for the Registrar General's record of his birth, and also of his marriage if his wife came with him. This will give the parentage and the profession of the father, and will open a whole new line of inquiry with the maiden name of the mother. The marriage record similarly opens up another maiden-name line or research, and perhaps a new geographical area if the couple came from different localities.

Research in the General Register Office may be carried out either in person or by post. Researchers attending in person can make a search for a single entry covering five years for 3/6 (42 cents), or they may spend six hours in unrestricted searching of birth or death records for 30/- ($3.60), or six days in searching marriage records for the same fee. If a required entry is found, a certificate can be supplied for 10/- ($1.20). Searching can also be done by office staff in response to postal inquiries, but in this case your are expected to be very precise in your requirements. Your are asked to fill in a form in which you will give the name of the person whose birth or death or marriage record you require, with sufficient particulars for identification, and you must say exactly which years you wish to have searched, sending 3/6 (42 cents) for every five years, for the office will not make a general search through its records for information about a family, with individuals and dates unspecified. But here, for the genealogist, is the difficulty. A name alone will probably not suffice for identification, unless it is a very unusual one. If one has ten years' records searched, for example, for the birth of a William O'Sullivan, the number of entries found may be so large that unless the parentage and place of residence are already known, it will not be possible to pick out the correct one--and these are usually the very facts the researcher wishes to find out. The Registrar General's staff will take a good deal of trouble in trying to pick out a required entry, but if they cannot identify with certainty they will leave it to you to decide whether any of the entries they have selected is the one you require. But within these limits, the first step in family research, here as elsewhere, is to extract whatever information can be extracted from the records of the Registrar General.

III. Parish Registers

Church records, in particular parish registers, form a class of records which, like the records of the Registrar General, consit just as they stand of purely genealogical material, and for dates earlier than 1864 they are our first resort. There are, of course, certain limitations on their use, the greatest being that in order to use them at all one must first know the parish or parishes concerned, and, as often as not, this is just what the inquirer does not know. However, if he has a place name of any kind, even though it may not be a parish name itself, he can identify the parish from it by means of the "Townland Index." The other thing he must know is, of course, the religious denomination of the family at the time in question. In this connection it is well to remember that, for the 18th century at least, the Established Church (i.e. Protestant Episcopal) registers often contain entries referring to people of otehr denominations, and that in order to avoid the effects of the Penal Laws, many Catholic families might contain members who were officially Protestant, but whose descendants returned to their ancestral allegiance once the pressure of the laws was relaxed. No matter what the denomination of the family, the Protestant Episcopal registers ought therefore always to be searched.

I have not time to go into great detail as regards the extant parish register material, and in any case a very full account of it, with a number of most useful lists, is given in chapters III to IX of Part III of Mrs. Falley's book. And I will not deal at all with the records of teh Presbyterian Church or other non-Episcopal Protestant denominations, for, as their greatest numerical strength lies in the six counties of Northern Ireland, Mr. Darwin's paper covers them, I will therefore confine myself to Catholic and Protestant Episcopal registers.

To take first the Catholic registers. These begin on the whole rather later than the Protestant ones, and it is easy enough to see why when one considers the conditions under which the Catholic Church carried on its work during the period of the Penal Laws. Without proper church buildings, but only the makeshifts known as mass houses, and with no house in each parish officially recognized as the presbytery, the parish clergy did not enjoy the conditions for regular record-keeping and preservation. Whether registers survived or not depended largely on the local standing of the Parish Priest; if he were unmolested owing to the presence of a well-disposed landlord, his records might be well kept. If his position were precarious and he lived perhaps as a lodger concealed in a parishioner's house, whatever records he kept might well be lost. So we find that the earliest Catholic registers come from the first quarter of the 18th century, and that most of them belong to Dublin city parishes. In large towns other than Dublin you may expect registers to begin in the middle or late 18th century, in rural areas later still, and generally speaking the poorer and more remote the area the later they will be, many such parishes having nothing before 1835 or 1840. In such cases you may find that the earliest ancestor had left Ireland before the register for his parish began.

Catholic parish registers are in the custody of the Parish Priests concerned, and any applications regarding the registers themselves should be made to them. Their names and addresses can be found in the Catholic Directory published annually by James Duffy and Co. The National Library has recently completed its project of microfilming the Catholic parish registers, and I think that its list of parishes covered (numbering some 900 with details of the registers themsleves) is by this time in the Genealogical Society's archives here. These films are not directly open for public consultation, but they can be used by the Genealogical Office, which is connected with the library and therefore has access and can carry out searches.

The Protestant parish registers were, until 1922, more numerous than the Catholic, and they still form a very rich source of genealogical material. Comparatively wealthy and unmolested, the Protestant church of the 17th and 18th centuries was better able to compile and safeguard records, and accordingly we find six parishes whose records begin within ten years of the first known canon of the church requiring the keeping of registers, which was enacted in 1634, and one (St. John's, Dublin) beginning even earlier, in 1619. Four of these six are in Dublin city, and the other two are Holy Trinity, Cork, and Templemore, the Derry cathedral parish.

The first thing to remember about the Protestant registers is that a good number of the earlier ones (mainly for Dublin city parishes, but including also Aney, County Limerick, Rathmacknee and Kilpatrick, County Wexford, the liberties of Cashel, and Templemore, County Derry) have been printed, by the Parish Register Society of Dublin; a list is given on pp.297--299 of Mrs. Falley's book. If what you are interested in is not on this list, you will have to apply to the rector for permission to consult the original register, but, since the Protestant registers containing material earlier than 1870 were constituted public records by act of Parliament, information as to their extent and whereabouts is available from the Public Record Office, so that it will probably save time to write first to me, and I can then tell you what is extant and to whom application should be made. Mrs. Falley's book contains a list of parishes possessing registers prior to 1870, with the extent of their records, and particulars of existing copies, where there are no originals. In using this, or any other list of Protestant parishes, it must, however, be remembered that Church of Ireland parish names are usually those of the original medieval parishes, within which towns having quite different names may since have grown up; the town of Bandon, for example, which has extensive registers. goes under the parish name of Ballymodan. In cases like this the modern town name and not the old parish name is the one most likely to be known to the inquirer. Also, much rearrangement and consolidation of parishes has taken place, and many parishes listed separately in old lists are now subdivisions of united parishes which bear the name of the largest population centre in the group. This means that even when you have a list, you may still need to identify the parish by means of the annual Irish Church Directory; you cannot simply take the parish name and write a letter addressed to "The rector".

I have said that the earlier Protestant parish registers were constituted public records. This was done by an act of 1875, the registers covered being those containing records of baptisms or burials before 1870 or marriages before 1845. The act laid down that such registers were to be withdrawn from the custody of the church and placed in the Public Record Office. This provision caused much resentment, and another act in the following year provided that where a suitable place of storage could be provided locally, the records might be retained. Six hundred and thirty-seven parishes took advantage of this act, but the registers of the 1,006 remaining ones were sent in to the Public Record Office where they perished in the destruction of 1922. Fortunately many rectors were provident enough to make and retain copies of their registers. After the fire the Public Record Office sent out questionnaires to the clergy and compiled lists of these copies in local keeping; it covers 124 parishes and is printed as an appendix to the Deputy Keeper's 56th report. The office is at present in course of filming the surviving registers for parishes in the Republic, but these films, like those of Catholic parishes in the National Library, are not for public use, unless the incumbents, when applied to, should themselves direct that they be used in place of the originals. The Public Record Office of Northern Ireland has completed the filming of the Church of Ireland parish registers for parishes in the Six Counties, and arrangements have been made by which they may be used.

IV. The Registry of Deeds

In the Registry of Deeds we have a one-purpose archive where the purpose is not directly related to the needs of the genealogical student, so we cannot expect our questions to be answered here quite so directly as they are by a birth certificate or an entry in a parish register. To be answered at all, they must fit into the scheme of the records themselves. But the Registry of Deeds, being a one-purpose archive, is fairly simple of approach and the wealth of genealogical material which it contains is quite astonishing.

The Registry of Deeds, now housed in James Gandon's King's Inns building on a hill to the North of the Liffey, was established long before Gandon's time, in 1708, under an act which provided for the lodging of summaries, known as "memorials", of deeds affecting property, and which laid down that in case of conflict a registered deed should always prevail against an unregistered one. It did not make registration compulsory, but made it so worth while that it became almost universal, except in the case of very short leases. The memorials are bound into large volumes, of which the Registrar estimates that there are about a quarter of a million, weighing five or six pound apiece, and that there is about another quarter of a million volumes of transcripts and abstracts, weighing about four pounds apiece--which works out at well over a thousand tons of material. The memorials are indexed both by person and place. The public may consult all this material, paying fees proportionate to the time spent, but as fees are waived in favour of genuine historical and genealogical students, this aspect is not important. And it is gratifying to know that the energy of the Genealogical Society's microfilming section has been such that in the beginning of this year the gigantic task of filming the entire collection of memorials was completed, and that the films are here for consultation in Salt Lake City. The Registry's means of reference, the lands and names indexes, had been filmed some years before. Copies of memorials have still to be obtained, if required, from the Registry itself, but the document required can now be identified here and a simple reference number sent to Dublin, a facility which I am told is already being widely used.

Now, what are the limits of what the Registry of Deeds can do for the researcher? First, it records only transactions from 1708 onwards. This is not too serious for the average worker beginning on his family tree; he will not be concerned with the period before 1708 until he has made considerable progress already. Secondly, the man who leaves traces in the Registry of Deeds is the man of property. The vast mass of the population, the tenant farmers holding land on short lease or at will, escape the meshes of the administrative system, for they are too small to be caught. For the many thousand who fled from eviction or famine there may be no record at all in the Registry of Deeds. On the other hand, if you know that your ancestor was comfortably off (I say only "comfortably off", for it is a complete misconception that only the aristocracy can be traced in this way), it is likely that you will reap a very rich harvest. Not only is your ancestor likely to have carried out a good many property transactions, but the deeds, taken individually, may contain a great quantity of genealogical information, particularly in the introductory part of the document which we call the "recitals", which may give the history of the piece of property concerned, and hence of the families who owned it, for a long time previous to the transaction which is now being registered. So when I say that the Registry of Deeds is concerned only with the period from 1708 onwards, this needs some modification. A deed of 1708 or later may start with a reference to a grant from the Crown in, say 1660, and may trace the way in which the piece of property has been transferred or inherited from that time forward, and in the course of these recitals many hither to unknown family connections may be revealed. Deeds of settlement, which lay down the way in which property is to descend in various eventualities, are of particular value, as they will list the names and relationships of all those who may ever inherit, and thus give a full or almost full account of the family situation at that particular date.

A fact that is also often not realized is that not only were deeds registered, but in the 18th century and early 19th the practice was common of lodging wills in the Registry. This practice died out in the 19th century, probably owning to the establishment of the modern probate registries, in 1858, after which a double registration by the state would not have been felt necessary. The wills are sometimes recorded in the testator's own words, probably in full, or else in the form of long precis known as 'narrates', or of short precis containing only the more important provisions. The Registry of Deeds is therefore a rich souce of substitutes for wills of which the originals are no longer in existence. Summaries of these registered wills have therefore been published by the Irish Manuscripts Commission, in two volumes, covering the years 1708 - 1745 and 1746 - 1785 respectively, and comprising 1464 abstracts in all. A third volume, going down to 1828, is in preparation. Reference numbers are given by which full copies can be ordered from the Registry if required.

The Registry of Deeds, then, is both one of the most rewarding of our record collections, and the easiest to deal with. Its records are very rich, and homogeneous in character and therefore easily understood, and above all, owing to the enterprise of the Genealogical Society in Salt Lake City, its wealth can be exploited with the minimum of correspondence, and without setting a foot on the other side of the Atlantic.

V. The Public Record Office

I come now to the Public Record Office itself, which will probably be the office with which the genealogical inquirer becomes most familiar, from the range and variety of the records which it contains even today.

The Public Record Office was founded in 1867, and was intended to house the records of all the organs of government then existing, i. e. the courts of law, the probate registries and the Chief Secretary's Office and Privy Council Office, with their various sub-departments. By the time the records of these various bodies had been gathered together in the newly built office next door to the law courts on the North bank of the Liffey, they formed one of the world's richest collections of ancient rocords. From the genealogist's point of view the richest material, perhaps, consists of the parish registers, about which I have already said something, and the wills, with their associated papers, from the probate registries and from the old ecclesiastical courts which preceded them, going back to the sixteenth century, from the latter of which came also the marriage licence records. Of almost equal importance were the census returns of 1821, 1831, 1841 and 1851, the various classes of late 17th century and eighteenth century taxation records, such as the hearth money rolls, which constituted something resembling censuses, giving as they did lists of householders assessed to taxation, and, going back still further, the various lists of proprietors of land, dispossessed persons and new grantees, prepared in connection with the great confiscations and redistributions of the seventeenth century, and the even earlier series of the Inquisitions Post Mortem. The Public Record Office as it stood just after the first World War is described in Herbert Wood's Guide to the Public Records of Ireland, published in 1919, but that work, indispensable though it still is to the Irish historian and genealogist, is now less a·guid·book than an obituary. It is all too often my melancholy duty, when talking to researchers from abroad, to dash their hopes of being able to browse among the rich collections listed there. Wood's guide had scarcely been in use for two years when the Irish historian's great national tragedy took place, and the Public Record Office became one of the casualties of civil war. Occupied by one party as their headquarters, it was shelled by the other, the bombardment culminating in a violent explosion on June 30th, 1922, in the rear portion of the office where the records were stored, when the whole of the record treasury became a mass of flames. From that holocaust scarcely anything survived except the documents which had been in use at the time when the Republicans took over the building and which were therefore being kept temporarily in the reading room safe, and the various indexes and summaries which were normally kept in the reading room. The present contents of the office, with these exceptions, consist, then, of material acquired since 1922. In July of that year the staff were able to start on the task of searching the ruins, and, in the words of Mr. Morrissey, Mr. Wood's successor as Deputy Keeper, they faced 'a scene not easy to be ... imagined. The search room and the other rooms on the ground floor were piled high with debris ... the files and office correspondence were in a state of chaos ... the presence of explosive substances rendered the work of salvagedangerous.' Their immediate concern was to salvage, identify, list and repair whatever could be found of the contents of the treasury, and the results of their labours can be found in the lists of salved material which are printed as appendices to the 55th and 56th reports of the Deputy Keeper. These make depressing reading, for they are, alas, pitifully short. The next task was to compile lists of surviving documents, in the Public Record Office or elsewhere, which might serve as substitutes for the vanished treasures, and these lists were also published as appendices to the same reports. When I say, therefore, that Wood's Guide can no longer be used as a guide to the existing collections, that does not mean that nothing whatever remains of what is listed in it. The student, having realized that he can no longer consult the actual records in Wood, should go on to discover what exists in the way of substitute material, both in the Public Record Office and elsewhere, and of this there is quite a considerable quantity. The third task which Mr. Morrissey and his staff had to undertake after the burning was that of actually collecting substitute material. This could most easily be done by enlisting the help of the legal profession, who have, on the whole, responded nobly, presenting large quantities of old deeds, rentals, estate plans and accounts, and, above all, of original probates and other testamentary documents, which have in the course of time built up into a collection which is widely used both by lawyers and genealogists. Whenever possible, notes and copies made by pre-1922 scholars have also been acquired. At the same time the Public Record Office has continued its normal work of taking in records from courts and probate offices, and has from time to time received collections of documents from various government departments and offices, notably from the Department of Education and from the Quit Rent Office (an office responsible, until its absorption by the Land Commission in 1943, for certain land revenues formerly due to the Crown). In these ways a quite considerable collection has been built up, which now fills approximately 25,000 feet of shelving.

I can give only a brief account of this large and diverse collection, so I will confine myself to the classes which will be of most use to the genealogist. But first, how should the researcher set about consulting them? Let me begin by emphasising that the Public Record Office is solely a record repository and not a research agency. It produces records for your inspection and supplies xerox copies, and can generally arrange for microfilming, but thestaff cannot go through a record and see whether it contains a particular piece of information, or select items from it for copying if you cannot indicate clearly what you require for yourself. It is necessary for you to carry out your own research, either personally or through an agent, and if you wish to order copies by post it is necessary to state what pages or items you require, out of some document in a series which is known to be in the office. The office will not, for example, be able to do anything for you if you write saying that your great grandfather was called Daniel Sweeney and you want any available information about him. You will have to ask, for example, whether the office has a copy of the will of Daniel Sweeney, who died on such and such a date, or order a copy of the tithe applotment record for such and such a townland in such and such a parish, where Daniel Sweeney is known to have lived. You have to ask, in fact, for a particular record, not for a particular piece of information. You will decide for yourself which class of records in the office is likely to contain the information you want, and then you will read the record and extract the information yourself. If you wish to have this done for you, you apply not directly to the Public Record Office, but to the Genealogical Office, about which I will tell you something later, that is, if you do not wish to make your own arrangements to have your work done by a friend on the spot or by a professional agent.

If you wish to have the enjoyment of making your own investigations, I hope that you will find it useful to begin them by going through my own Short guide to the Public Record Office, and picking out from it the class of records on which you wish to concentrate, and will go on to follow up the more detailed lists to which it directs you, especially those printed in the Deputy Keeper's reports subsequent to 1922, i. e. nos. 55 to 59. If you wish to make any inquiries by letter about any records mentioned in any of them, it will be much appreciated if if you give the exact page reference to the source of your information. But whatever your subject of research, I would suggest that you start with the general card index to what we call the M series (M for Miscellaneaous), and find out whether it reveals the presence of any collection of papers concerning the very family into which you are researching. This is something of an outside chance, but if you are lucky you may find an appreciable quantity of material collected ready for you. Failing this, the first series in the Public Record Office on which the genealogist should concentrate is the testamentary documents. The Public Record Office is the final place of deposit for original wills, records of grants of probate and administration and the papers leading up to them. These remain for twenty years in the probate offices and are then passed to the Public Record Office. This means that, allowing for some delays in transfer, a count back of twenty years from the burning in 1922 brings us to 1904 as the year when our full series for the whole country begins. So for a will 20 years old but subsequent to 1903, you simply find the relevant entry in the annual index to grants of probate and administration which the Principal Probate Registry prepares; if you cannot give the year, the Public Record Office staff will consult five years' indexes for you in response to a postal query, but not more. In the case of a pre-1904 will, you must find out the date of the grant, and the registry in which it was made (there are six district registries at present, in addition to the Principal Probate Registry in Dublin; just before 1958 there were 12 diocesan or consistorial courts in addition to the Prerogative Court, that of the Primate), and then see whether it is among the few surviving originals, and, if not, whether there is a copy in existence, either in the Public Record Office or elsewhere. You may be lucky enough to have asked for a will from a date or registry covered by one of the seventy surviving will books (these are books of copies prepared by the probate registries). If not, there may be a copy acquired by presentation from a solicitor (there are now above 18,000 of such copies), or, failing a full copy, there may be an abstract made by some pre-1922 genealogist. If the will is one proved before 1800 in the Prerogative Court, the ecclesiastical predecessor of the Principal Registry, then there will be a brief abstract in the set of volumes known as the Betham Genealogical Abstracts, compiled by the distinguished 19th century genealogist, Sir William Betham. And if there is nothing at all in the Public Record Office, there may yet be a copy somewhere else, in the Registry of Deeds, in the Genealogical Office, or in the records of the Society of Friends if the testator belonged to that community or among the 1500 abstracts in the library of the Representative Body of the Church of Ireland. The Irish Manuscripts Commission has published abstracts or indexes for the first three of these collections. Indexes of the presented copies in the reports of the Deputy Keeper; lists of this kind have not been continued, but all copies and originals acquired are card indexed and can be easily located. Once a will has been located, the researcher is equipped with information which may lead in all kinds of directions - to the names of the immediate family, of course, probably to links with related families, or to the identification of landed property the history of which can be followed up through the Registry of Deeds.

The marriage records formerly in the Public Record Office were among the records there most valuable to genealogists. They consisted of records kept by the old ecclesiastical courts of grants of marriage licences and of the marriage licence bonds, documents in which the parties gave the court their undertaking that there was no impediment to the marriage. They were no exhaustive marriage records, as they covered only marriages by licence, and not those by banns, but in many cases they preserved records of marriages for dates or parishes not covered by registers. They practically all perished in 1922; the survivors are some bonds for Dublin diocese for the period 1749 - 1813. The indexes of bonds still remain, and copies of many individual items are to be found among purchased or presented documents, especially among the genealogical abstracts made by Miss Gertrude Thrift, and among the Betham genealogical abstracts, which cover Prerogative marriage licences from 1629 to 1801 and Dublin marriage licences, 1660 - 1824. The Genealogical Office is also rich in abstracts of marriage licence grants made from Public Record Office documents before their destruction.

The exact location of the family is, as we have seen, of the first importance in genealogical research. If this is known, one may find further information in any of a large number of series in the Public Record Office. Here the date is important. Was the family still in Ireland in 1901, and if so, do you know the exact address? If you do, you can consult the census returns for that year, which is the earliest for which we have a complete set. If, as is most likely, they had left Ireland by then, and if they were located in County Cavan in 1821, in county Derry in 1831, or in county Antrim in 1851, a return may survive, but if not, the census is unlikely to be useful, for the sad story of the Irish census returns is that those for 1813; 21; 31; 41 and 51 were in the office in 1922 and did not survive, except for some for Antrim, 1851 (the Cavan and Derry material consists of duplicates acquired since 1922), and a few scattered individual items. There are also various copies of individual returns among the purchased and presented documents. As for the censuses of 1861, 71, 81 and 91, incredible though it may seem, they were never preserved but destroyed by the census authorities as soon as they had been digested into the printed reports.

If no census returns can be found, there are other collections which consist of lists of people. Of the two most important of these, one is in print, and the other is in MS in the Public Record Office. The earlier, that in MS, is the series known as the Tithe Applotment books. Tithes were in their medieval origins a payment by everybody to a church to which everybody belonged, and were therefore submitted to as a natural thing, but in the Ireland of the early nineteenth century they were being paid by a predominantly Catholic population to a minority church to which the mass of the people did not belong, and they were therefore bitterly resented. An agitation against them resulted in their being converted into a rent charge, smaller in amount, payable by the landlords. The assessment of this meant that a list of tithe payers, with the acreages they held and the tithes they paid, had to be drawn up, and this was done, parish by parish, around the year 1830. The resulting records - an applotment book or books for each parish - were passed by the Church authorities ot the Land Commission and by them to the Public Record Office in 1944. For the genealogist they have the disadvantage that they are not a complete census; they give only the names of the occupiers themselves, the heads of households, without details of their families, but even so, they are one of the most important of all our genealogical sources. The same information, for a date some twenty years later, can be obtained from the General Valuation of Ireland, carried out in the 1850's and early 1860's, which exists in printed form. Even if the exact place of residence of the family is not known, this can now be found out without much trouble from the Tithe Applotment or the Valuation, for the National Library has prepared a combined surnames index to both, county by county, so that once the county is known one can at once get down to parish level.

The collections I have mentioned are the ones most generally useful. Whether anything else in the Public Record Office is likely to help you depends on circumstances - date, place, profession, social level and so on. Here again, if your ancestors were comfortably off, they are most likely to have left traces. If you can link yourself with a well-to-do family as far back as the 17th century, you may find material in the Inquisitions Post Mortem or the Books of Survey and Distribution. Up to 1660 the Crown was entitled to certain payments on the deaths of landholders holding by the feudal tenures corresponding to what we now call freehold, and to the guardianship of their heirs if under age, so on the death of every such landholder a list of his lands had to be made and the identity and age of his heir established. The Inquisition Post Mortem was the document embodying the results of these investigations. It often goes into questions of title, giving descents for several generations and often quoting deeds and wills for this purpose; thus it provides a vast amount of genealogical information. The original inquisitions perished in 1922, but fortunately fairly full summaries of them had been made by the Irish Record Commissioners between 1810 and 1830. The Commissioners had meant to print them all, and they did get about half those for Leinster and Ulster published; the rest are in Mss. in the Publice Record Office, but it is hoped that publication of them may begin before long. For most counties they begin in the reign of Elizabeth I, but for some in that of Henry VIII. Unfortunately they are not indexed, but there are at any rate lists, published by the Record Commissioners in an appendix to their 8th report, of 1818, which gives at least the names of the deceased landholders on whom the inquisitions were being held.

The Books of Survey and Distribution are the other important source for the 17th century. The middle and late 17th century were a period of agonizing upheaval in Ireland, which resulted in the wholesale replacement of the older property-owning class by new grantees. The paperwork involved in these changes was, of course, enormous, and most of it found its way to the pre-1922 Public Record Office, from the offices of the Chief Remembrancer, Surveyor General and Auditor General of the Exchequer. Most of it perished in 1922, but in the early 1940's the Public Record Office acquired a duplicate set of one of the most important series concerned, the Books of Survey and Distribution. These are, to put it briefly, volumes in which the results of the 17th century confiscations are summed up. They have, on their left hand pages, the names of the head landlords in 1641, the year when the upheavals began, and on their right hand pages the names of the new owners to whom the lands were granted under the Act of Settlement in the reign of Charles II or in 1710 after the confiscations resulting from the Williamite wars. They are now in course of publication by the Irish Manuscripts Commission; counties Clare, Galway, Mayo and Roscommon have appeared, and the MSS for the rest are available in the Public Record Office. As the MS volumes have not got personal name indexes, they cannot easily be used until the family has been located at parish level.

Records of lawsuits, particularly of those concerning title to land, are also rich sources of genealogical information, since the investigation of title generally involves the tracing of descent, but the vast bulk of these records was lost in 1922. However, for the Court of Chancery at any rate, there are still substantial survivals and substitutes. Of survivals, there are still many original Chancery pleadings, i. e. the documents setting out the claims of the parties and the facts on which they rely, ranging from the 16th century to the early 19th. As most of them concern title to land, they are of great genealogical value. They are at present in course of indexing. There are also summaries prepared for the 19th century Record Commissioners of the decrees (i. e. the decisions) of the Court of Chancery from 1537 to 1827; these contain less family information than the pleadings, but they do serve to link up families with their property, and as they have both personal and place indexes, they are fairly easy to consult. For the Court of Exchequer there is a similar set of summaries of decrees, covering the years 1624 - 1804, but as these are not indexed, they are less accessible. For both courts we have a number of indexes, some going back to the 17th century, of which particulars are given in an appendix to the Deputy Keeper's 55th report. Such indexes, even though they give only parties' names and dates of proceedings, may be very useful in filling in gaps, where there is a background of other information.

The inquisitions and Books of Survey and Chancery documents are generally concerned with the wealthier members of society. The lower one goes in the economic scale the more difficult becomes the task of the genealogist. The substantial farmer may be traceable in a freeholders' or voters' list; of these there were large numbers in the pre-1922 Public Record Office, and copies of some of them have been acquired since the burning. The tenant farmer holding on short lease or at will is harder to trace, but a rental of the estate on which he lived may reveal him. There are many private rentals among the presented family papers in the Public Record Office, and there is also a series of 148 volumes of rentals prepared by the Incumbered Estates Court and its successors for the period 1850 - 1885, when many large estates were being sold by order of the court under the early Land Acts. These rentals are arranged by date and indexed under landlords' names; should it be possible to compile a surname index to the occupiers mentioned in them, this could be a valuable source of genealogical information. Such copies as there are of old taxation records, particularly of Hearth Money Rolls, may also be helpful; of these there are a number in the Public Record Office, as well as in The Genalogical Office and the MSS department of the National Library. A most useful list of the extant copies and their whereabouts is given in Mrs. Falley's book (Vol. I, pp 631--639). I cannot, however, go into all the possibilities in the course of this brief paper, but I hope that it may at least give you some idea of the sources most likely to yield results.

VI. The Genealogical Office

I am dealing last with the Genealogical Office, or Office of Arms, because it differs from the other institutions I have mentioned in not being primarily a record repository, though it does possess a collection of records which, though comparatively small, is a specialized genealogical one, and of great value. Though the records are not automatically open to public consultation, the head of the office, the Chief Herald, takes a very liberal attitude in allowing access to them by bona fide scholars.

The Genealogical Office is the successor to the Office of Ulster King of Arms, which dated from 1522 and performed the same functions for Ireland as did the College of Heralds for Great Britain. The function of a King of Arms was primarily the granting of arms and adjudication upon claims to their use, in the course of which latter function he became a species of genealogical investigation officer and his office a repository of genealogical lore concerning all families with an claim to nobility or gentility. The Office of Arms has still its ancient function of the grant and registration of coats of arms, but with the changing centuries the attitude of the average man towards matters of heraldry has changed--the possession of a coat of arms is no longer the exclusive mark of social importance that it once was, but on the other hand a more discerning interest in all aspects of family history, including the heraldic, has become far more widespread. The Office of Arms has accordingly broadened its base and become the Genealogical Office, an office which carries out genealogical work not only for families whose ancient glories include coat armour, but for anyone sufficiently interested in the roots from which he has sprung to ask for its services. Thus it differs from the Public Record Office in being an actual investigating organization. To use its services is the shortest and most efficient way of tracing your Irish origins if you cannot be on the spot to examine records in person or have not the time to devote to the work. The professional researchers attached to the Genealogical Office will search whatever records are likely to help in compiling your pedigree, whether they are to be found in the Genealogical Office itself or in any other repository within reach, including the Public Record Office, the Registrar General's Office and the Registry of Deeds. The work is charged for according to time spent; at present the charge is 1 ($2.40) per hour.

The records in the Genealogical Office have, fortunately for the American investigator, been filmed by the Genealogical Society, so that they are available her in Salt Lake City. They may be divided into two groups--the Office of Arms' own original records compiled in the office itself, and the collections of genealogical data compiled by Ulster and his officials from records elsewhere, especially from the pre-1922 Public Record Office. The first group consists mainly of the register of grants of arms from 1698 onwards, the three original heraldic visitations, of County Dublin for 1568 and 1607 and County Wexford for 1618. (A heraldic visitation was the periodic review which a King of Arms carried out, county by county, of all persons in that county entitled to bear arms), and the 17 volumes of funeral entries, which were records of the funerals of persons of rank and standing which were attended by Ulster or his deputy, and which are of genealogical importance because they give particulars of the immediate family of the deceased. In the second group, the most important series is a 29-volume set of record pedigrees and a set of 39 volumes of genealogical charts made by Sir William Betham, who was Ulster King of Arms from 1820 to 1853. Copies of lost freeholders' lists and other old tax records may be found here as well as in the Public Record Office, and there is a considerable quantity of miscellaneous material collected by former genealogists. This includes about 7,500 will abstracts, an index of which has been published by the Irish Manuscripts Commission in its publication Analecta Hibernica, No. 17. The Genealogical Office is in fact a rich source of substitute material for public records lost in the fire of 1922. Its records are particularly approachable in that name indexes exist to the greater part of them.

There are two major manuscript collections in Dublin with which I do not deal in this paper. One is the MSS department of the National Library, but the bearing of its contents on the history of emigration has been sufficiently indicated in Mr. Henchy's paper. The other is the State Paper Office in Dublin Castle, which contains the records of the Chief Secretary's Office and the Council Office, with their sub departments, ranging from the end of the eighteenth century down to the end of British rule, and open to the public on application to the Keeper of State Papers down to 1894. This is, of course, a source which no one studying Irish history in the 19th century can afford to neglect, but it is difficult to divide its records into series of greater or less genealogical interest, for they consit mainly of the registered papers of the Chief Secretary's Office--a huge series of reports and correspondence which deals with anything and everything to do with the administration of the country, since anybody might at any time approach the office about anything, while the office might initiate inquiries into anything whatsoever. It is not possible to say beforehand who may or may not be mentioned in these records, beyond the fact that someone involved in politics is more likely to be featured than someone who is not. In particular, if there is any possibility that the ancestor was a member of the Fenian Brotherhood, the State Paper Office should on no account be neglected, for there is a large and important series of papers there dealing with the Fenian movement. Holders of official positions are also likely to occur as correspondents. But the collection is so large and so varied that it is not possible to say in any particular case whether the ancestor concerned is likely to be mentioned or not. The investigator must make his own inquiries, with the help of the series of indexes which accompanies the records. He may find nothing, but on the other hand he may find biographical data of the most interesting kind.

C. Patent Rolls and associated documents (containing names of persons receiving grants of lands, offices etc. from the crown).

1. Calendar of Patent and Close Rolls, Henry II - Henry VII, prepared for the Irish Record Commissioners. 1 vol., Latin, 273 pages, with index (House of Commons command paper, 1828).

2. Calendar of Patent and Close Rolls, Henry VIII - Elizabeth & Charles I, by James Morrin, (3 vols., Dublin and London, for H.M.S.O., 1861 1862 and 1863. The indexes to these are very defective. For the Tudor period the fiants (see 4 below) are a better source.

3. Calendar of Patent Rolls, James I, prepared for the Irish Record Commissioners of 1810-30 and subsequently printed though not published by Alex. Thom of Dublin. Reproduction published by the Irish MSS Commission (Dublin, S.O., 1966). Index in preparation.

4. Calendars of fiants. The fiant was the document which authorized the issue of a patent. No patent could issue without a fiant, but there could be failure to enrol;

the fiants are therefore a more exhaustive record than the Patent Rolls. Calendars were made in the P.R.O. and printed as appendices to D.K. reports, as follows:

Henry VIII (with index)	- 7th report	(1875)
Edward VI " "	- 8th "	(1876)
Philip & Mary " "	- 9th "	(1877)
Elizabeth (calendar only)	-11th, 12th, 13th, 15th, 16th, 17th and 18th reports.
Elizabeth (index)	-21st and 22nd reports

5. John Caillard Erck - Repertory of the Patent Rolls, 2 vols., covering first 7 years of James I (Dublin, 1836 and 1852)

D. Documents relating to the 17th century confiscations and redistributions.

1. Census of Ireland, 1659 (giving names of principal landholders only), from a MS among the Lansdowne papers. Cos. Cavan, Mayo, Tyrone and Wicklow and parts of Cork and Meath missing. Published by the Irish MSS Commission, ed. J.S. Pender, (Dublin, S.O. 1939).

2. Civil Survey (a survey of the ownership of land in 1640) - 10 vols., covering Cos. Cork (barony of Muskerry only), Derry, Donegal, Dublin, Kildare, Limerick, Meath, Tipperary, Tyrone, Waterford, Wexford and Kilkenny city. Published by the Irish MSS Commission, ed. R.C. Simington (Dublin, S.O. 1931-61). Indexes in preparation.

3. Books of Survey and Distribution (volumes summarizing land ownership before and after the 17th century confiscations). 4 vols., cos. Roscommon, Mayo, Galway and Clare. Published by the Irish MSS Commission, ed. R.C. Simington (Dublin, S.O., 1949-68).

4. Abstracts of grants of land made under the Acts of Settlement and Explanation, 1666-1684, with indexes of persons and places. Appendix I to 15th report of Irish Record Commissioners (Irish Record Commissioners Reports, Vol. III, pp. 45-340).

5. Names index to certificates of the Court of Claims, 1666-1668 (i.e. decrees made by a court set up to adjudicate on the conflicting

2. The Stafford Inquisition of Co. Mayo, 1635. Gives ownership of land back to June 1625. Published by the Irish MSS Commission, ed. W. O Sullivan, from a copy in the Royal Irish Academy (Dublin, S.O., 1958).

3. Calendar of Christ Church deeds, 1174-1684 (a collection of deeds affecting the property of Christ Church cathedral, Dublin. The original deeds covered 1174-1867, but those after 1684 were not printed. A MS catalogue survives). Printed as an appendix to the 20th, 23rd and 24th reports of the Deputy Keeper of the Records, with index in appendix to 27th. Of value in identification of Dublin residents.

4. Personal names indexes to courts documents presented to the P.R.O., 1922-1930:-

   Chancery documents, mainly 19th century, acquired 1922-28. Appendix II to 56th report.

   Exchequer documents, mainly 19th century, acquired 1922-28. Appendix III to same.

   Common Pleas documents, acquired 1922-1930, and Chancery and Exchequer documents, acquired 1929 and 1930. Appendix II to 57th Report.

5. Patentee Officers in Ireland, 1173-1826. An index of names of officials appointed under the crown by letters patent. Published by the Irish MSS Commission, ed. James L.J. Hughes (Dublin, S.O., 1960).

This bibliography is not intended to be anything like exhaustive, section II (with one exception) being limited to records now or formerly in the Public Record Office, and to editions covering complete series. Short extracts, particularly will abstracts in private keeping, will be found in genealogical and historical periodicals.

Ireland Historical Background

Introduction

Effective family history research requires an understanding of the historical events that affected your ancestors and record keeping. Learning about wars, local events, laws, migrations, settlement patterns, and economic or religious trends may help you understand family movements. These events may have led to the creation of records that mention your ancestors. Your family history research will be more interesting if you learn about the events that shaped your ancestors' lives.

Historical Overview

This list contains some key dates and events in Irish history. Use the links to go directly to the period you are most interested in.

1000 to 1600
1600 to 1700
1700 to 1800
1800 to 1900
1900 to present

1002-14	Brian Boru created a united Irish Kingdom.
1169-1270	The Normans invaded Ireland from England. A feudal system was imposed, and modern agricultural practices were introduced. Towns and cities were built. English common law was practiced. The government was centered at Dublin in the "Pale". Norman-Irish lords held 70% of the Island. The Gaelic-Irish held lands in the northwest and southwest.
1270-1484	The Gaelic-Irish gradually took back most of Ireland, and the Norman-Irish became assimilated into the Gaelic life and language. Toward the end of this period the Norman-Irish family of Fitzgerald of Kildare effectively governed Ireland while the English crown was busy with various wars at home and with France.
1494	The English crown officially claimed Ireland as part of England. Meetings and legislative drafts of the Irish parliament were subject to the control of the English king and council. But in 1496, Kildare, the lord deputy who had ruled Ireland before 1494, was reinstated.
1541	Henry VIII of England became King of Ireland.
1550s & 1580s	English families were sent to Ireland to receive estates from the crown as rewards for service. Civil servants received lands in Munster province. Many Irish families were displaced.
1560	The Anglican church (Church of Ireland) became the state church of Ireland under Elizabeth I.

1558-1603	During Elizabeth's reign, any who challenged her authority were punished with a "scorched earth" policy and the sword.
1607	Ninety-nine Gaelic-Irish earls, who refused to accept the "surrender and regrant" land policy of Elizabeth I and her successor James I, left Ireland for the continent, never to return. This marked the end of the old Gaelic order and established England as the conqueror of Ireland.
1605-1609	The plantation of Ulster was started. Presbyterians from Scotland were sent to Ulster to displace Gaelic-Irish Catholics (who were either driven to western Connaught or stayed in Ulster as peasant laborers) and to strengthen English rule.
1619	The earliest known Church of Ireland parish register (St. John, Dublin) was begun.
1634	A law was passed requiring that Church of Ireland registers be kept.
1637	Presbyterian worship was suppressed by the Church of Ireland.
mid-1600s	The Quaker, Congregationalist, and Baptist movements began. The Huguenot migrations to Ireland also began.
1641-49	Ulster natives overthrew English colonial rule, and Irish rebels (an alliance of the Gaelic-Irish and Norman-Irish) established a Catholic government called the Confederation of Kilkenny.
1649-52	Oliver Cromwell crushed the rebellion in Ireland. Catholics who could prove they had not been involved in the rebellion were given estates in West Clare. During the Cromwellian Plantation, lands were confiscated from the Norman-Irish (Catholic) lords and awarded to Protestant supporters, mainly in the counties of Leix, Offaly, Tipperary, Wexford, Leitrim, and Longford.
1674	The oldest known Presbyterian register (Antrim, County Antrim) was begun.
1690	The Irish Parliament was established in Dublin.
1695-1728	The Penal Laws against Catholics were in force. Catholic clergy were banished. The Catholic church was forbidden to keep parish registers, and Catholics were deprived of the rights to own property, hold office, and vote.
1719	The Toleration Act was passed, protecting Protestant dissenters.
1726	Nonconforming Presbyterians separated from the main Presbyterian body to form the presbytery of Antrim.
1720	British Parliament began to legislate for Ireland, and the British House of Lords had the powers of a supreme court in Irish law cases.
1747	The Methodist movement began.
1750s	Some Catholic registers in urban parishes were begun. Many Church of Ireland registers were begun.
1772-95	Catholic Relief Acts gradually restored the rights taken away by the Penal Laws.
1782-93	An act was passed validating marriages performed by Presbyterian ministers (1782). Legislative acts gave power back to the Irish Parliament and more rights to Irish Roman Catholics.
1800	Ireland united with England and Scotland to form the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.
1819	The Presbyterian church began to require its ministers to keep records.
1821	The first genealogically useful census was taken.

1829	Irish Catholics became free to practice Catholicism without legal persecution. Many Catholic records were begun.
1845	Civil registration of non-Catholic marriages began.
1845-49	Potato Famine. Blight destroyed the potato crop for several consecutive years, resulting in starvation and disease. Over a million died and millions more emigrated.
1850-1914	Emigration continued, which helped to stabilize the economy.
1850	The Reform Act was passed, basing the right to vote on occupation rather than on property ownership.
1858	The Principle Probate Registry began proving Irish probates.
1864	Civil registration of births and deaths began. Marriage registration began to include Catholics.
1869	The Church of Ireland ceased to be recognized as the state church.
1876	A law was passed requiring Church of Ireland registers to be stored in the Public Record Office, Dublin.
1878	The 1876 storage law was amended to allow Church of Ireland ministers with suitable storage facilities to retain their records.
1919-22	Civil strife resulted in 1,468 deaths. A treaty, signed on 7 January 1922, split Ireland into the predominantly Catholic Republic of Ireland and the predominantly Protestant Northern Ireland.
1922	Irish Civil War. Irregulars of the Irish Republican Army opposed to the 1922 treaty occupied the Four Courts building where many Irish records were housed. The building was burned and many records destroyed. A separate record repository was established for Northern Ireland. The Public Record Office, Dublin, burned, destroying many Church of Ireland parish records and other documents of genealogical value.

Historical Sources

A few comprehensive Irish histories include:

- Foster, R. F. The Oxford Illustrated History of Ireland. This book provides a history of Ireland written in modern times.
- Griffin, William D., ed. and comp. Ireland: A Chronology and Fact Book. This book contains a lengthy time line of Irish history supplemented with transcripts of historical documents.
- O'Donovan, John, ed. Annals of the Kingdom of Ireland: From the Earliest Times to the Year 1616. This series provides a comprehensive history of early Ireland in Gaelic and English. It contains many dates of specific events, including the deaths of some individuals.

Local Histories

Local histories are particularly helpful in understanding the time, places, and conditions in which your ancestor lived. Local histories describe the economy; the prominent families; and the founding of churches, hospitals, schools, and businesses in an area. Even if a local history does not mention your ancestor, it may direct you to records that do.

For many localities, more than one written history exists. Local histories can be found in major research libraries, including the Family History Library. The Family History Library has many national, county, and parish histories for Ireland as well as histories for specific periods, groups, occupations, and localities in Ireland. Major research libraries may have similar histories.

Local histories available at the Family History Library are listed in the Place Search of the Family History Library Catalog under the name of the county, parish, or town. Go to What to Do Next, select the Catalog, and search for your locality of interest.

Ireland, How to Find Compiled Sources

Guide

Introduction

When you begin family history research for one of your ancestors, you should begin by looking for compiled research. Compiled research sources contain names of individuals for whom data has been transcribed, indexed, or collected. These sources were created by individuals, groups, societies, universities, archives, and commercial corporations. Determining what research has already been done by others, including your own family members, can:

- Save you valuable research time.
- Help you find information in original records more quickly.
- Help you avoid unnecessary duplication of work.
- Provide clues for further research.
- Guide your research.

What You Are Looking For

Look for compiled sources which may give information on your ancestors. The information you find varies from record to record. These records may include:

- Names of children, spouse, parents, siblings, and other family members.
- Birth or baptism, marriage, and death or burial information.
- Dates of other important events such as immigration or land purchases.
- Age at the time of dated events.
- Place or street of residence.
- Occupations.
- Schools attended.
- Military service.
- Religious affiliations.
- Country, county, or specific place of origin.
- Other biographical data.

Steps

These 7 steps will help you find and use compiled sources.

Step 1. Identify compiled sources.

Identify as many compiled sources as possible. They can include:

- Published family histories.
- Unpublished manuscript histories.

- Local histories.
- Computer databases and surname listings.
- Compiled pedigrees.
- Biographies.
- Record collections.
- Indexes to original records (such as censuses, marriages, and gravestone inscriptions).
- Registries for research exchange.
- Surname or one-name lists.

To find examples of compiled sources, see the publications listed in Where To Find It.

Step 2. Locate compiled sources.

You can find compiled sources through:

- The Internet.
- Family History Centers.
- The Family History Library.
- Archives and Libraries.
- Heritage Centres.
- Societies (family history, county, regional, and national).

Step 3. Decide which compiled sources to search.

Search for compiled sources that:

- Deal with your specific family name.
- Cover your specific place of interest.
- Cover a range of years during your ancestor's lifetime.

Step 4. Search compiled sources.

Compiled sources are often indexed or alphabetically arranged. Search for your ancestors in the compiled sources you find. In addition to your direct-line ancestors, search for their family members, relatives, or in-laws. Information about other relatives may give you clues to information about your direct-line ancestors.

Step 5. Copy and document the information in your research notes.

Copy the information from the record exactly as it was given onto the family group sheets and pedigree chart for your ancestor. Be sure to record the source of the information onto a research log. You may want to make a photocopy of the record for future use. To learn how to keep good notes, see Note taking & keeping for genealogists.

Step 6. Analyze and use the information found in compiled sources.

Compare any information you found in compiled sources with knowledge you already have about your ancestor. Does it:

- Conflict with what you know? If the information conflicts, use other sources to verify it.
- Support what you know?
- Add to what you know?

Then ask yourself:

- Did the source have the information I wanted?
- Is this information accurate?
- Does this information suggest other sources to search?

Step 7. Verify information from compiled sources with other records.

When you obtain information from compiled sources, you must verify the information by searching original records.

Where to Find It

Internet Sources

FamilySearch Internet Genealogy Service

Many compiled sources are available on the Internet.You can search for compiled sources through FamilySearch Internet Genealogy Service. FamilySearch Internet can search online records and other web sites to see if they contain the information you need. To look for compiled sources through FamilySearch Internet, go to Search for Ancestors and use either the All Resources or Web Sites search option.

Websites

The following are examples of websites that provide compiled sources that are searchable by surname:

- Internet FamilyFinder
- Ancestry.com (Fee required)
- GenSeeker

Links to Websites

Many websites do not provide names and dates but link to sites that do. Examples of these are:

- CyndisList.
- GENUKI (Genealogy in the United Kingdom and Ireland).
- GenDex.
- Genealogy SiteFinder.
- Ireland GenWeb.
- Northern Ireland GenWeb.

Family History Centers

Family History Centers have computer databases of compiled records. In addition, a Family History Center may have some compiled sources for local families. Family History Centers can also borrow microfilms and microfiche of compiled sources from the Family History Library. The Library charges a small fee to loan microfilm or microfiche to a Family History Center.

If a compiled source is not available on microfilm, you may request a photocopy from the Family History Library for a small fee. You will need to fill out a Request for Photocopies form, which is available at Family History Centers. Complete the form with the library call number for the source. Send the form and the fee to the Family History Library. Note that many published sources are copyrighted and cannot be photocopied in their entirety.

Family History Centers are located throughout the United States and other areas of the world. For the address of the Family History Center nearest you, see Family History Centers.

Family History Library

The Family History Library has one of the world's largest collections of compiled research sources. These include:

- International Genealogical Index--available on microfiche, on computer, and on the Internet. It includes information extracted from civil registration and church records of Ireland. You may access the index here by clicking on Search for Ancestors above and then selecting International Genealogical Index.
- Ancestral File--available on microfiche, on computer, and on the Internet. It includes information submitted by individuals researching their Irish ancestry. You may access the index here by clicking on Search for Ancestors above and then selecting Ancestral File.
- Pedigree Resource File--index only, available on the Internet. The files are on CD and may be purchased online. You may access the index here by clicking on Search for Ancestors above and then selecting the Pedigree Resource File.
- British Isles Vital Records Index--available on CD at the library and many Family History Centers. It can also be purchased online.
- Family History Library Catalog, Surname Search--lists published family histories; available on microfiche, on computer, and on the Internet. You may access the catalog here by clicking on Family History Library Catalog above and then selecting Surname Search. Search for your surname of interest.

There is no fee for using the library's collection in person.

Sources for Previous Research in the British Isles lists and discusses major compiled sources available in the Family History Library. Some of these sources are available in other archives and libraries.

For information about contacting or visiting the library, click on Family History Library System above.

Archives and Libraries

Compiled sources are available in archives and libraries throughout the world. Some major archives and libraries are:

Ireland

- The National Archives of Ireland.
- General Register Office, Dublin.
- General Register Office, Belfast.
- The National Library of Ireland.
- The Public Record Office of Northern Ireland.

England

- The British Library.
- Public Record Office.
- Society of Genealogists.

Australia and New Zealand
- National Archives of Australia.
- National Archives of New Zealand.
- National Library of New Zealand.

United States and Canada
- National Archives (U.S.), with regional branches throughout the country.
- Newberry Library.
- Library of Congress.
- New England Historic and Genealogical Society Library.
- National Library of Canada.

Addresses for archives and libraries can be found at Ready, 'Net, Go. Select Master List of Archives.

Contact an archive or library before you visit to find out what compiled sources are available.

Heritage Centres

Government sponsored offices, called Heritage Centres, are located throughout Ireland to assist individuals with their Irish family history research. They have compiled collections and indexes of Irish records, including:

- Church records.
- Census records.
- Civil registration records.
- Gravestone inscriptions.
- Tax records.
- Land records.
- School registers.
- Trade directories.
- Voters' lists.
- Workhouse records.

Centres will search their collections for a fee. For more information about these centres, go to the Irish Family History Foundation web site.

Societies

Family history and genealogy societies may also extract and index records and may have collections of research done by their members and others. Many societies also publish journals and periodicals that include compiled research.

Some of the societies in Ireland include:

- Local family history societies.
- The Irish Family History Society.
- The North of Ireland Family History Society.
- The Ulster Historical Foundation.

Ireland, How to Find Information About a Place Where Your Ancestor Lived

Guide

Introduction

Once you have identified the name of a place in Ireland where your ancestor lived, you should learn more about it. Knowing details about a place will help you find records about your ancestor. For more detail, see Background.

Sources that provide information about places in Ireland include:

- Gazetteers.
- Topographical dictionaries.
- Townland Indexes.

What You Are Looking For

The information you find varies from source to source. In these sources you may find information about:

- Location.
- Jurisdictions.
- Places of religious worship.
- Geographical descriptions.
- Population.
- Industries and manufacturing.
- Land use.
- Geological features.
- Estates.

Steps

These 5 steps will help you find information about a place in Ireland.

Step 1. Choose a place where your ancestor lived.

Look at the information you have gathered and choose the name of a parish, town, or townland where your ancestor lived. If only the county or country is known, go to How To Find a Place-Name.

Step 2. Choose a gazetteer.

Choose a gazetteer or similar source to search. The following gazetteers are listed in order of the amount and value of the information they give. These gazetteers are available at the Family History Library. Other gazetteers may be available at a library near you. You may want to look at more than one gazetteer to gather details about the place you have chosen.

Title	Publication Date	Features
The Parliamentary Gazetteer of Ireland.	1844	Gives location, jurisdictions, geographical description, local religions, local estates, industries and manufacturing, land use, and population breakdown by religion.
Lewis's Topographical Dictionary of Ireland.	1837 and later editions	Gives location, jurisdictions, geographical description, local religions, local estates, industries and manufacturing, land use, and population.
Cassell's Gazetteer of Great Britain and Ireland.	1894-1898	Gives location, geographical description, local religions, local estates, industries and manufacturing, and land use.
Index to the Townlands, Towns, Parishes, and Baronies of Ireland, 1851.	1851; reprinted 1984	Alphabetical list of townlands and towns giving the county, barony, civil parish, and poor law union jurisdictions.
Bartholomew's Survey Gazetteer of the British Isles.	Original, 1904; 9th edition, 1943; reprinted 1966	Gives location and geographical description; also gives jurisdictions, industries and manufacturing, and population for larger cities.

Gazetteers and topographical dictionaries are not the only sources for information about place-names. For more sources, see Tip 1.

Step 3. Obtain a copy of a gazetteer.

You may find gazetteers at:

- Family History Centers.
- The Family History Library.
- Other archives and libraries.

Step 4. Search the gazetteer for the place-name.

Once you have obtained a copy of a gazetteer, look for the name of the place where your ancestor lived. Information in gazetteers is arranged alphabetically by the place-name.

If you cannot find the place in a gazetteer or other place-name source, see Tip 2.

Step 5. Copy the information and note the source.

Copy the information about the place-name onto family group sheets, a pedigree chart, and in your notes. Some of the information may not seem helpful at this time but may be important in future research. You may want to make a photocopy of the information directly from the source.

Be sure to write down the source of the information on a research log, including any library call numbers. Be specific when writing down this information. If you should ever need to look at the source again, your documentation will show where to find it in the record. If anyone else should consult your research, they will also see where the source is located. Your research log will serve as a guide to your research.

Tips

Tip 1. Where else can I find information about a place?

Information about places can also be found in:

- County histories.
- Town or parish histories.
- County directories.
- Descriptive regional guides.
- Encyclopedias.

Look for these other types of sources in a local archive or library catalog. To search the Family History Library Catalog, go to What to Do Next, select the Catalog, and look for the county, town, or parish, and your topic of choice.

The Internet may also provide sources of information about places in Ireland.

Tip 2. What if I cannot find the place-name in any of the suggested sources?

You may not find a place-name because it is:

- Misspelled.
- Known by another name.
- Obsolete.
- A farm or other property name.

We suggest you contact the Ordnance Survey offices in Ireland to see if they can assist you. Their addresses, including e-mail, are listed on their web sites:

- Republic of Ireland
- Northern Ireland

Tip 3. How can I find a map showing the place where my ancestor lived?

For information on how to find a map, see How To Find Maps.

Background

Once you have identified a specific place in Ireland where your ancestor came from, you need to identify the jurisdictions that included that place. Knowing jurisdictions is important when looking for records. Church records are kept by ecclesiastical authorities, but one religion's jurisdictions are not the same as another. In addition, civil jurisdictions are different than religious, and there have been several levels of civil jurisdiction that have kept records of genealogical value.

Jurisdictions of importance include:

- Ecclesiastical parish.
- Diocese.
- Civil parish.
- Barony.
- Poor law union.
- District electoral division.
- County.
- Province.

When you find a source of information about your place, make note of all of the jurisdictions in which it is included.

Where to Find It

Family History Centers

Family History Centers may have gazetteers for Ireland on microfiche or microfilm. Other place-name sources may also be available. Centers can purchase microfiche or borrow microfilm from the Family History Library. There is a small fee to have a microfilm sent on loan to a center.

Family History Centers are located throughout the United States and other areas of the world. Find a Family History Center near you.

Family History Library

The Family History Library has several gazetteers and other place-name sources for Ireland in book form as well as on microfilm or microfiche. There is no fee for using the library's collection in person.

You may request photocopies of pages from a gazetteer or other source from the library for a small fee. You will need to fill out a Request for Photocopies form, which is available at all Family History Centers. Complete the form with the book, film, or fiche number you found in your search of the Family History Library Catalog (see What to Do Next). Send the form and payment to the Family History Library.

Other Archives and Libraries

Addresses for archives and libraries can be found at Ready, 'Net, Go. Select Master List of Archives.

Ireland, How to Find Maps

Guide

Introduction

Maps are an important source for locating where your ancestors lived. They can identify:

- Places.
- Parishes.
- Jurisdictions.
- Churches.
- Cemeteries.
- Streets.
- Geographic features.
- Transportation routes.
- Distances.

Maps may be flat sheets, bound in atlases, or incorporated into gazetteers. This guide will tell you about the usefulness of maps and instruct you on how to find maps of Ireland. For more information about maps, see Background.

What You Are Looking For

A map of the area of Ireland where your ancestors lived in order to:

- Locate a place.
- Identify jurisdictions.
- Gain an understanding of the surrounding area.

Steps

These 6 steps will help you find a map of Ireland for use in your research.

Step 1. Determine your map needs.

Different types of maps serve different purposes. You should determine what kind of map you need. Do you need to know:

- Neighboring towns?
- Distance between places?
- Boundaries of a jurisdiction?
- Agricultural uses of the land?
- Geographic features such as mountains and rivers, mines, or migration routes?

Determine your map needs so you can find the right type of map.

Step 2. Look on the Internet.

Sites on the Internet provide maps of Ireland. GENUKI, which stands for "Genealogy for the United Kingdom and Ireland," has links to maps of Ireland as well as specific counties or regions.

Step 3. Visit a library near you, and look in the library catalog.

You will probably not find maps on the Internet to fill all of your needs. You could also visit a library. Any library near your home may have maps of Ireland. It may be a public, university, or genealogical society library. The larger the library, the larger and more varied will be their map collection. Look in the library's catalog for a list of maps, atlases, or gazetteers for Ireland.

Step 4. Search the Family History Library Catalog.

You may search the Family History Library Catalog for maps of Ireland. Go to What to Do Next, select the catalog, and look for maps for Ireland, a county, or a specific town or city. When looking at the catalog entry for a map, make note of the library call number, and be sure to find out if it is also available in microform.

Maps within books, such as local histories, are not normally listed in the Family History Library Catalog. Many of these maps are listed in Rural and City Maps.

Step 5. Obtain a copy of a map.

You can obtain a copy of a map in one of the following ways:

- Personally visit the Family History Library or another library, and use the library call number to find a copy of a map.
- If you cannot personally visit a library, you may be able to have a map copied for you. Contact the library and inquire about their photocopy services. The Family History Library also offers photocopy services. You should complete a Request For Photocopies form, which is available at Family History Centers. Include the library call number for the map, and mail it to the library with payment.
- If the map is available on film or fiche at the Family History Library, you may visit a Family History Center and order a copy of the film or fiche to be sent to the center for a small fee.
- You may purchase a map to help you in your research. Maps should be available at bookstores and other similar outlets near you, or you can purchase maps directly from the Ordnance Survey offices in Dublin, Ireland, or Belfast, Northern Ireland.

Step 6. Cite your sources.

Be sure to cite the source of your map. When you cite your source, you document the map. If you should ever need to find the source of the map again, your documentation will show you where to find it. If others should consult your research, they will also see where to find the source of the map.

Cite your source on a research log, and include the library call number or Internet site address. Your research log will serve as a guide to your research. When making photocopies of maps, also cite the source on the copy.

Background

Description

Maps are key to understanding the setting of your ancestors' lives. Your ancestors' childhoods, educations, occupations, and migrational movements were all affected by the places in which they lived. If your ancestors lived in a farming area, a mining area, or a city, they would likely have followed occupations that were related to where they lived. If they chose to migrate to another area, they would likely have followed accepted migration routes. Maps can help identify and locate these types of features.

Maps are published individually or in atlases, which are bound collections of maps. Maps may also be included in:

- Gazetteers.
- Directories.
- Guidebooks.
- Local histories.
- Other history texts.

Different types of maps can help you in different ways:
Historical maps and atlases are especially useful for understanding boundary changes. They describe the growth and development of countries and may show:

- Various jurisdictional boundaries.
- Migration routes.
- Settlement patterns.
- Military campaigns.
- Other historical details.

Road atlases show distances between places and may provide landmarks.

Ordnance survey maps show townships in great detail—up to ten inches to the mile.

City and street maps are extremely helpful when researching large cities, such as Dublin. City maps can show the locations of:

- Streets.
- Churches.
- Cemeteries.
- Businesses.
- Government offices.
- Monuments.
- Parks.

Topographical maps show the terrain of the land.

Ireland, How to Find a Place Name

Guide

Introduction

Events in the lives of your ancestors, including births, baptisms, marriages, and deaths, may have been officially recorded at the time they took place. In many cases, you need to know exactly where an event took place in order to find a record of it. If you don't know the place, you may be able to find that information in sources readily available to you. This guide suggests sources that may help you identify place-names.

What You Are Looking For

Look for the name of the place where an event occurred in the life of one of your ancestors.

Steps

Follow these 8 steps to find sources that will help you identify a place-name.

Step 1. Gather information from home and family sources.

Many sources for identifying place-names may be found in your own home or in the home of a family member or relative. These sources may include:

- Letters.
- Journals and diaries.
- Scrapbooks.
- Family Bibles.
- Birth, baptism, marriage, or death certificates.
- Photographs.
- School records.
- Military records.
- Naturalization papers.
- Obituaries and funeral cards.
- Newspaper articles.
- Deeds.
- Pension records.
- Tax records.
- Wills and other probate records.
- The personal knowledge of older relatives.

Any of these sources could supply needed place-names. Gather information from the sources you can find in your home and from relatives.

Step 2. Write the information on forms.

Write the information you find on pedigree charts and family group record forms. If you need forms, you may print them from your computer now, or you can order a supply online. You can also purchase a software program for your home computer that helps you organize your genealogy and allows you to print out these forms. Programs are available at most computer software stores. One program, Personal Ancestral File, may be downloaded online. It may also be purchased on CD-Rom.

Not all of the information you collect will fit on pedigree charts and family group record forms. See Tip 1.

Step 3. Decide on a research goal.

Once you have gathered information and recorded it on forms and in notes, you can see what information you have and what is missing. You may have dates without places to go with them. Even when a place is identified, you should verify that it is correct. Determine a place name, such as a place of birth, that you would like to find or verify. This is your research goal.

Step 4. Look for compiled research sources.

After reviewing home and family sources and selecting a research goal, look for research on your family compiled by others. Someone else may have already identified places where the events in the lives of your ancestors occurred. Compiled research may be found in private and public collections of individuals, libraries, and societies, as well as on the Internet.

For more information about finding compiled research sources, see How to Find Compiled Sources.

Step 5. Analyze what you know about your ancestor.

If you are still missing the name of the place where an event in your ancestor's life occurred, you can analyze the facts you do know to help you determine where to look for the missing information. See Tip 2.

Step 6. Look for indexes.

Look for indexes to records with broad coverage for Ireland or for indexes to records for the specific county where your ancestor lived. Surname indexes to collections of records may provide the names of places where people of your surname lived. You can then look for your ancestor in records of those places. Indexed records may include:

- Civil registration records.
- Census records.
- Church records.
- Burial or cemetery records.
- Probate records.
- Tax records.
- Land records.

Indexes are available at libraries with genealogical collections, such as the Family History Library. Indexes may also be available on Internet web sites. Some indexes are created by family history societies, private groups or individuals and may be available for purchase from them. For more information on finding indexes, see Where to Find It.

Step 7. Cite your sources.

Every time you find new information in a record, cite your source. When you cite a source, you document the information taken from that source. If you need to look at the source again, your documentation will help you find it. If others should consult your research, they will also be able to find the source.

Cite your sources on a research log, and include a library call number when applicable. If it is an original source, make note of where you found it. Your research log will serve as a guide to your research.

If possible, make photocopies of your sources, and cite the sources on the copies.

Step 8. Find information about a place.

Once you have identified a place, you should find information about it.

You should also locate the place on a map.

Tips

Tip 1. What should I do with information that does not fit on my genealogy forms?

In addition to names, dates, and places, you will collect additional information about the lives of family members that does not fit on standard genealogy forms, such as:

- Military service.
- Education.
- Employment history.
- Social or economic status.
- Migration.
- Participation in community, social, religious, or historical events.
- Physical description.
- Other biographical details.

You should keep this additional information as notes. Keep these notes with your records, or include them in the area provided for notes in your genealogy computer program. Your notes should also include the source of the information.

Tip 2. How do I analyze what I know about my ancestor?

You can analyze the facts you know about your ancestor to help determine where to look for missing information. For example, if you are looking for the birthplace of your ancestor, you might ask yourself the following questions:

- What is the earliest known fact about my ancestor?
- Where were my ancestor's parents born, married, or buried?
- Where were my ancestor's siblings born?
- Where was my ancestor married?
- Where was my ancestor's spouse born?
- Where were my ancestor's children born?
- Where did my ancestor die?
- If my ancestor emigrated, who were his neighbors in the place where he eventually settled?
- Did any of my emigrant ancestor's relatives also emigrate?

You may search the records of the places where any of these events took place to see if you can find birth information for your ancestor. In addition, learning about your ancestor's relatives and neighbors may give you clues that will help you find information about your ancestor.

Where To Find It

The following are suggestions for finding indexes to records that may help you identify place-names:

On the Internet

Indexes to selected records of Ireland may be available on Internet web sites. In addition, many of the family history societies in Ireland and throughout the world have Internet web sites that contain lists of their publications for sale, including indexes. You can access many of the sites for Ireland and some indexes through GENUKI. Others may be available through additional websites such as CYNDISLIST.

Family History Centers

Most Family History Centers have at least one index to records of Ireland in their collections:

- International Genealogical Index, available on microfiche, on computer, and on the Internet. It includes information extracted from civil registration and church records of Ireland. You may access the index here by clicking on Search for Ancestors above, and then selecting the International Genealogical Index.

Some Family History Centers will not have microfilmed indexes to records of Ireland in their collections, but centers can borrow microfilms from the Family History Library. There is a small fee to have a microfilm loaned to a center.

If an index is not available on microfilm, you may request a photocopy of an index page from the Family History Library. You should complete a Request for Photocopies form, which is available at all Family History Centers. Complete the section of the form for books, and include the library call number for the index that you obtained from the catalog. Send the form and the payment to the library.

Family History Centers are located throughout the United States and other areas of the world. See Family History Centers for the address and phone number of the center nearest you.

Family History Library

The Family History Library has a large collection of indexes to records of Ireland that could help you identify place-names. There is no fee for using the library's collection in person.

For a list of the library's holdings, click on Family History Library Catalog above. Do a Place Search for both the country and your county of interest. Look for topics with Indexes as subtopics. When looking at the catalog entry for a specific index, check to see if it is available in microform and can be sent to a Family History Center.

For more information about contacting or visiting the library or a Family History Center, click on Family History Library System above.

IV. IRISH CENSUS AND CENSUS SUBSTITUTES

Pre 1821 Census Returns

1740 Parliamentary Returns - In 1740, a list of the heads of Protestant households was made. Lists for the following are housed at the Presbyterian Historical Society, Fisherwick Place, Belfast: Baronies of Cary, Dunluce, Kilconway, and Toome in County Antrim; Ennishown Barony in County Donegal; Evagh Barony in County Down; Baronies of Coleraine, Kenought, Kilconway, Loughinshollin, and Tyrkeering in County Londonderry.

1766 Religious Census - In 1766, a list of Protestant and Catholic householders was made. Most of this list was burned in the 1922 fire. However, part of it survived; some had been copies or extracted prior to the destruction.

1813 Census - The 1813 population schedule of Ballyeaston Presbyterian Congregation, Co. Antrim is available at the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI). The G.S. also has a copy.

1821-1851 Census Returns

1821 Census - The 1821 census lists the name of the parish and barony, house number, number of stories in house, names of inhabitants and their relationahip to the head of the house, their ages and occupations, and the number of acres. Most of the census was destroyed. Following is a list of the extant portions: County Cavan parishes of Annagelliff, Ballymacue, Castlerahan, Castleterra, Crosserlough, Denn, Drumlumman, Drung, Kilbride, Kilmore, Kinawley, Larah, Lavey, Lurgan, Mullagh and Munterconaght; County Fermanagh parishes of Aghalurcher and Derryvullen; County Galway parishes in the baronies of Arran and Athenry; County Kilkenny parishes of Aglish and Portnascully (reprinted in The Irish Ancestor periodical); County Meath Parishes in the baronies of Upper and Lower Navan; County Offaly parishes in the barony of Ballybritt including the town of Birr; County Waterford city of Waterford (reprinted in The Irish Genealogist periodical).

1831 Census - The 1831 census gives parish and barony, name of owner or occupier of land, number of males and number of females in family, number of male and female servants, and religion. The extant portions of this census are all found in County Londonderry. Parishes that survived are Aghanloo, Agivey, Arboe, Ballyaghran, Banagher, Glendermot, Killowen, Mocosquin, Tamlaght-Finlagan, Templemore, and Termomeeny. Limited portions of other parishes in County Londonderry also survived.

1841 Census - The 1841 census gives name, age, sex, relationship to the head of family, marital status, year of marriage, occupation, education (read or write) and native of what county or city. Only one parish's enumeration survived the fire, that of Killeshandra, Co. Cavan. It is at the PRO, Dublin, and at the G.S.

1851 Census - The 1851 census gives the same information as the 1841 census except that it also indicates whether the individual was blind, deaf, or dumb. Enumerations of the following parishes survived the fire: Drumkeeran in Co. Fermanagh; Aghagallon, Aghalee, Ballinderry, Ballymoney, Carncastle, Craigs (Aghoghill), Dunaghy, Grange of Killyglen, Killead, Kilwaghter, Larne, Rasharkin, and Tickmacrevan in Co. Antrim.

VI. IRISH PROBATE RECORDS

Medieval, Ecclesiastical & Civil Wills

Prior to 1536, there were some wills. Some are deposited at Trinity College, Dublin, and the Royal Irish Academy, Dublin. See the 55th Report of the Deputy Keeper of the Public Records of Ireland for more particulars.

In 1536, Ireland was organized on the English system of dioceses and archdioceses. If an individual died possessed of property in more than one diocese valued at five pounds or more, his estate had to be probated by the Prerogative Court (archdiocese). Normally, a probate would be handled by either a diocesan court, known as a bishop's court or episcopal consistory court, or by the prerogative court. Occasionally, peculiar jurisdiction was given to an individual small geographic area. Both wills and admons (administrations of intestate estates) were handled in this manner.

In 1922, most of the original wills and admons were destroyed in the fire at Four Courts. Index books were in the Public Search Room and were not burned. Fortunately, many copies, extracts and abstracts were made prior to the fire.

First, search the appropriate diocesan index and the prerogative court index for possible pertinent entries. If applicable or possibly applicable entries are found, one must then try to locate a copy.

Sir William Betham abstracted ALL of the Prerogative Court wills and admons 1537-1800 for his own use. He then made "will pedigrees" from them. Sir Bernard Burke then copied the will pedigrees for his use. Both Betham's and Burke's collections are extant. Burke's will pedigrees are at the Public Record Office in Dublin. Betham's abstracts are at the Public Record Office in Dublin. His will pedigrees are at the Genealogical Office, Dublin Castle. They are also on microfilm at the G.S.

The Public Record Office in Dublin maintains a card index to the copies, originals, unproved wills, abstracts, and extracts that they have been able to collect since 1922. Other places collecting replacements for destroyed wills and admons are the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland and Dublin Castle.

Some wills have been deposited at the Irish Registry of Deeds, Henrietta St., Dublin. They are indexed in the surname index to the Registry along with the other memorials. Abstracts of the Registry wills 1708-1800 have been made and published by P. Beryl Eustace.

Estates valued at more than forty pounds were subject to a type of inheritance tax, the estate duty. Copies of those wills are housed at the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland and have been microfilmed by the G.S. as have most of the other documents mentioned here.

In 1858, jurisdiction for the probating of estates was withdrawn from the Church of Ireland. Civil probate court districts were formed--one Principal Probate Registry in Dublin and eleven districts. The records of most of these district registries have been microfilmed by the G.S.

IRELAND - MARRIAGE LICENSES

Marriage Licenses (1629–1864)

If a couple desired to be married in the Anglican church, they had to purchase a license from the representative of the bishop for their diocese or ask their minister to publish or proclaim banns. The proclamation of banns meant that the minister either announced the marriage plans for a three-week period in church or posted them publicly. This time period allowed anyone to object to the proposed marriage.

Marriage by banns was the cheapest and the most common form of marriage. Unfortunately, however, records of banns can seldom be found. The only evidence of the marriage is usually the entry found in the church's marriage register.

If a couple desired to marry immediately, they purchased a marriage license from a representative of their bishop or the Archbishop of Armagh. At that time several documents were drawn up, consisting of both an allegation and a bond. The allegation listed the names of the bride and groom, their ages, marital status (widow, widower, bachelor, spinster), and the intended place of marriage. A bond was then made to ensure that all information was valid. Most of the bonds, allegations, and actual licenses no longer exist, but the indexes to them and some abstracts have survived. These indexes are arranged by diocese. [redacted] There are no known indexes for the Derry diocese and very few for Limerick, Kildare, or Ardfert dioceses. The indexes give the names of the couple and the year of marriage. Abstracts usually contain more details. Following is a list of existing indexes and abstracts:

2 Parish Registers in the National Library of Ireland

For most family history researchers, parish registers provide the earliest DIRECT source of family information. Unlike most earlier records, parish registers provide evidence of direct links between one generation and the next (via baptismal registers) and one family and another (via marriage registers).

Because of their importance for family history research, in the 1950s and 1960s the National Library of Ireland carried out a programme of microfilming all of the Catholic parish registers available for filming at that time. As a result, the National Library holds microfilm copies of the registers of most Catholic parishes in Ireland (incl. the counties of Northern Ireland).

The start-dates of the registers vary from, for example, the 1740/50s in some city parishes in Dublin, Galway, Waterford, Cork and Limerick, to the 1780/90s in counties such as Kildare, Wexford, Waterford and Kilkenny. Many of the registers of parishes in counties on the western seaboard do not begin until the 1850/60s.

The year 1880 was taken as the cut-off date for the microfilming of parish registers. By that date, civil or State registration was well under way and post-1880 genealogical information should be available from the records in the General Register Office.

To establish the start-date of the parish registers relevant to your research, check the List of Parish Registers on Microfilm in the Main Reading Room, in the Genealogy Service, or on the Library's Website at www.nli.ie).

The List of Parish Registers on Microfilm includes a list of parishes (by diocese), the covering dates of the registers in each parish, and the National Library Call Number (P.xxxx)of each film.

If you are uncertain as to the diocese in which the parish relevant to your research is situated, consult either the key to parishes included with the Index of Surnames or one of the annual Catholic Directories. There is an alphabetical index to parishes at the back of the Catholic Directory which will direct you to the relevant parish entry in the Directory. This, in turn, will allow you to establish the diocese in which the parish is situated.

Alternatively, if you know the name of the civil parish, you could consult Samuel Lewis's Topographical Dictionary of Ireland (1837) – Case XXIV in the Reading Room – which gives a description of each civil parish and includes information regarding the corresponding Catholic parish.

Access to the Microfilms of the Registers:

Microfilms of registers for the following dioceses are freely available for consultation in the Library (names in brackets refer to counties or part counties included in each diocese):

Achonry (Mayo-Roscommon-Sligo), Ardagh and Clonmacnoise (Longford-Leitrim-Cavan-Roscommon-Sligo-Westmeath), Armagh (Derry-Tyrone-Armagh-Louth-Meath), Clogher (Fermanagh-Monaghan-Tyrone-Donegal-Louth-Cavan), Clonfert (Galway-Offaly-Roscommon), Cloyne (Cork), Cork and Ross (Cork city and southern part of Co. What kind of Information is Contained in the Registers?

The quality of the information in the registers may vary from parish to parish. In general, however, baptismal registers contain the following information:

child's name father's name mother's name and maiden name names of godparents
(Place of residence is often included).

Marriage registers contain the names of the bride and groom, and their witnesses. In some cases place of residence is also recorded.

The registers are handwritten and include records of baptisms and marriages, but only rarely include records of deaths.

Latin is used in many registers, but neither surnames nor place names were translated into Latin. The same firstnames are used over and over again so you will become very familiar with the Latin forms used.

Research in the Registers:

Having obtained the relevant microfilm, begin your research by scanning the first page or two of the register - simply to become familiar with the kind of format or pattern used by the priest when recording baptisms and marriages. You are looking, first, for a SURNAME or SURNAMES and then for the particular information given in relevant entries.

As you search through the records, remember (and this applies to all genealogical research):

– Take into account all surname variants. Until recently, there was no real standardisation in the spelling of many surnames. If you have an "O" prefix to your name it was probably not used by most record-takers (or by your ancestors) in the 19th century.

– If you are uncertain as to which particular entries refer to your family then you must note all possibilities. As your information begins to build up from other sources you can eliminate those entries that prove to be irrelevant.

– Always note your sources. Note where you discovered a particular baptism or marriage.

– Note the exact years and records searched, even those records in which you found nothing. You don't want to have to search the same record twice.

THE NATIONAL LIBRARY DOES NOT PROVIDE COPIES OF, OR TRANSCRIPTIONS FROM, REGISTERS. ORIGINAL AND POST-1880 REGISTERS ARE GENERALLY IN THE CUSTODY OF THE LOCAL PARISH PRIEST. (THE ADDRESS CAN BE OBTAINED FROM THE CATHOLIC DIRECTORY).

Research Centres around the country have now indexed most parish registers. These indexes are not directly accessible to the public. However, the Centres will carry out commissioned research. Please take a copy of the leaflet listing the names and addresses, etc. of the Research Centres operated under the auspices of the Irish Family History Foundation.

INTRODUCTION

From 1823 to 1864, records were kept of people who paid taxes to the Church of Ireland or the government in Ireland. A surname index to these tax records is called the Index of Surnames of Householders in Griffith's Primary Valuation and the Tithe Applotment Books, commonly called the Householders Index.

The Tithe Applotment Books list people of all religions who paid taxes to the Church of Ireland between 1823 and 1838. Griffith's Primary Valuation Lists identify people who paid taxes to the Irish government between 1847 and 1864. Both of these records are important for locating people who lived in Ireland during these time periods, since other records such as census returns and church records may not have survived.

These tax records give the names of people who occupied land, where they resided, usually a description of their property, and the amount of tax assessed. The names shown in these records can be used to help determine a possible place of residence for an ancestral family.

HOW THE HOUSEHOLDERS INDEX CAN HELP YOU

You can use the Householders Index to:

- Find a civil parish within a county where a surname can be found. (A c*ivil parish* is an administrative subdivision of a county.)

- Search for an uncommon surname.
- Determine the frequency of a surname in Griffith's Primary Valuation.

The index is arranged by county. For each county there are two sets of surname lists. The first set covers the whole county and lists the barony(s) where the surname is found. (A barony is an administrative, tax, and regional division within a county.) The second set is arranged by civil parishes within each barony. The steps below discuss how to use the Householders Index.

GETTING STARTED

Before beginning a search, you should know the county where your ancestor resided. If you do not have this information, it will be necessary to search for the surname in every county listed in the Householders Index. Counties of origin are often found in personal journals, obituaries, family histories, vital records, and so forth. To search the Householders Index, follow the steps listed below. They are discussed in more detail on the following pages.

SIX STEPS TO FOLLOW WHEN USING THE HOUSEHOLDERS INDEX

1. Find the call number or film number for the county of your ancestor.
2. Locate the county in the print or film version of the index.
3. Locate the surname in the general surname index.
4. Locate the surname in the parish surname index.
5. Record the information for the surname.
6. Look in the actual tax lists to record additional details for the surname.

STEP 1. FIND THE CALL NUMBER OR FILM NUMBER FOR THE COUNTY OF YOUR ANCESTOR

See the Householders Index Call Number Guide for book call numbers and film numbers for the county you wish to search. This information is also listed in the Locality Search of the Family History Library Catalog under:

IRELAND - LAND AND PROPERTY - INDEXES

If you are researching at the Family History Library, use the printed index. If you are in a Family History Center, order the film for the county you wish to search.

STEP 2. LOCATE THE COUNTY IN THE PRINT OR FILM VERSION OF THE INDEX

A microfilm or book volume may contain more than one county. Counties are listed in alphabetical order. Because counties Cork and Tipperary are so large, they are divided into geographical sections in the Householders Index. Be sure that you search all the sections for these counties.

The introductory pages for each county include a title page, civil parish map, a list of civil and Catholic parishes, a contents page, and an explanation of the "G" (Griffith's Primary Valuation) and "T" (Tithe Applotment Books) references found in the indexes.

STEP 3. LOCATE THE SURNAME IN THE GENERAL SURNAME INDEX

Following the introductory pages of each county is the general surname index which includes the "G" and "T" references and the name of the barony where the surname appears. The number next to the "G" reference tells how many times that surname appears in Griffith's Primary Valuation records for that barony. A "T" reference appears if the surname is also found in the Tithe Applotment Books of that barony but does not indicate the number of times the name is listed.

Surname			Barony
Benson	G6	T	Gallen
Benson	G	T	Clanmorri

STEP 4. LOCATE THE SURNAME IN THE PARISH SURNAME INDEX

The general surname index is followed by the civil parish surname index. In this index parishes are in alphabetical order by baronies, with surnames recorded alphabetically in each parish.

To use this index, go to the barony(s) you identified in step 3. The contents page of each county's Householders Index has an alphabetical list of the baronies with page numbers where they will be found.

STEP 5. RECORD THE INFORMATION FOR THE SURNAME

When you find the surname(s) you are searching for, record all the information given, including the barony, union, civil parish, dates of Griffith's Primary Valuation and the Tithe Applotment Book, and "G" and "T" references. The "G" references in the civil parish list include the number of times the surname is found in each parish.

Figure 2 shows an example of what is listed for the surname Benson in county Mayo for the civil parish of Killedan:

STEP 6. LOOK IN THE ACTUAL TAX LISTS TO RECORD ADDITIONAL DETAILS FOR THE SURNAME

Once you have the information found in steps 2 through 5, look in the actual tax record to obtain the full details found in that source. Film and book numbers of the taxation records are listed in the Locality Search of the Family History Library Catalog under:

IRELAND - LAND AND PROPERTY

•The Tithe Applotment Books consist of 140 rolls of microfilm arranged by parish.
•Griffith's Primary Valuation Lists consist of more than 100 bound volumes that have been microfilmed on 22 rolls of film. The book collection of the index at the Family History Library is arranged alphabetically by county. The film collection listed in the Family History Library Catalog is arranged by county and either union or barony. (A union is an administrative division that may cross county lines.)

To find out what union a parish is in, check the alphabetical index to the parishes of Ireland in General Alphabetical Index to the Townlands and Towns of Ireland (1851 Census or 1901 Census) or in Alphabetical Index to the Townlands and Towns of Ireland (1871 Census). The book and film numbers of these sources are listed in the Figure 3 (on the following page) is an example of a tax record as it appears in an actual Griffith's Primary Valuation List. The Tithe Applotment Books do not include the names of the lessors nor do they give a description of the tenement.

Can't Find Your Ancestor in the Householders Index? Consider the following:

- You may be looking for someone who is not an occupier, such as a lodger.
- The index lists only those who owned, leased, or rented taxable property.
- The index is limited to the 1823-1864 time period.

OTHER INDEXES

Since the creation of the Householders Index, other indexes to the Griffith's Primary Valuation Lists and Tithe Applotment Books have been made.

The Public Record Office of Northern Ireland compiled a full name card index to the tithe applotment records for all counties in Northern Ireland. This index is called Tithe Applotment Index for Northern Ireland Counties. A CD index is now available for the tithe applotment records of Northern Ireland.

Individuals and companies have also produced microfiche indexes to the Griffith's Primary Valuation Lists for certain counties in Ireland. More recently a country-wide full name CD index to this tax source was produced.

The Family History Library has most of these recent indexes, but the records are restricted and cannot be sent to Family History Centers. Other repositories such as genealogical societies and local libraries may have copies of these indexes. These indexes are listed in the Locality Search of the Family History Library Catalog under:

Thé Irish in Britain (1841-1851)

THREE CENTURIES OF EMIGRATION FROM THE BRITISH ISLES

Irish Emmigration to North America for the Past Three Centuries

By

Patrick Henchy

As a separate state for the Twenty-Six County area did not come into existence until 1921 - the Irish Free State, which became the Irish Republic in 1948 - it is difficult and impracticable to confine oneself at all times to this area when dealing with emigration to North America for the past three centuries. For the earlier part of this period emigration was slight and confined mainly to one section of the community, Quakers. Fortunately, we have a major work on the subject - Myers (Albert C.): Immigration of the Irish Quakers into Pennsylvania 1682 - 1750. Pennsylvania, 1902. While the majority of the Quaker settlers of Pennsylvania came from England and Wales, Myers sets out to trace the emigration of Quakers from Ireland, and from records of the various meeting houses he gives the certificates of removal from Ireland for that period, with genealogical findings from Friends' records in Ireland and Pennsylvania. The tables provided by Myers give the numbers of those who emigrated as well as their place of origin in each county in Ireland. And, having examined all these records, he estimates that the total number of these emigrants was not more than 2,000.

The principal ports from which they sailed were Belfast, Dublin, Cork and Waterford. Philadelphia was the principal port of entry, and quite a number settled there. There were three waves of Quaker emigration; the first, from 1682 to 1710, was activated by religious persecution (for the Friends suffered much at the hands of the rebellious Irish); the second, from 1710 to 1730, was the result of the economics circumstances prevailing in Ireland at the time, chiefly because of the unemployment following on the Woollen Act of 1699. This emigration period reached its peak in 1729 when sixty four families arrived from Ireland; the third wave, 1730 - 1750, reached its highest peak in 1736 when thirty three adult settlers arrived. From 1741 the movement declined, and after 1750 very few Friends emigrated from Ireland.

All of these original Quakers were of Scottish or foreign race, and many of them served in Cromwell's army. It was from the widespread settlement of Cromwell that Quakerism in Ireland grew. It is of interest to note that William Emundson who had served with Cromwell in Ireland was the founder of Irish Quakerism, and that the first meeting was held in Lurgan as early as 1654.

Myers' well documented work gives a survey of existing records that is recommended for further study of the subject, and it also gives much interesting information on the social condition of the settlers in their new homes as well as the general contemporary picture, including accounts of the long transatlantic voyage.

These early trickles of emigration from the planter stock in Ireland were succeeded in the beginning of the next century by larger streams from another planter stock, the Presbyterians of the North. When the sacramental tests of Queen Anne were imposed for all office holders it was strongly opposed by these strong principled people. This resentment was accentuated by economic circumstances, and in addition to the decline of the woollen industry there was a series of bad harvests from 1725 to 1728, and later there was a partial famine in 1740 - 41. Emigration to North America, which had proved a successful venture for Irish Quakers, now attracted the Northern Presbyterians in their hour of plight. When hunger conditions prevailed, or when, as we see, tenants were evicted in their thousands on Lord Donegal's estates in Counties Antrim and Down, the emigrant ship suggested an immediate remedy.

According to Bolton (1) in July and August, 1718, five ships from Ireland anchored at Boston harbour bringing many thousands from the Ulster counties who quickly settled in the Eastern states. It was some of these families who founded New Londonderry in New Hampshire. These Presbyterian settlers had a fairly good education and belonged to a community of deep religious convictions. W.F. Marshall tells us (2) that during the period 1682 - 1718 several clergymen from the Ulster Presbyterian community had crossed the Atlantic and played a big part in building up the Presbyterian Church of North America. By 1729 about 6,000 Scotch-Irish had emigrated to North America, and for some years before 1750 it was reckoned that the annual number was about 12,000. The Gentleman's Magazine, 1774, lists the shipping from five Northern ports from 1769 to 1774, and estimates the number of emigrants as 43,000 for these years.

Emigration from the Twenty-Six Counties was not great, but Newfoundland attracted large numbers from the port of Waterford. More than 7,000 emigrants had left from there by 1814. In 1823 the English government (Ireland was, of course, part of the United Kingdom since 1801) attempted a colonization scheme in Canada. When Canada and its dependencies were placed under British rule in 1763 emigration from Great Britain to this area increased considerably. Royal proclamations of that year authorized the free granting of land there to ex-officers and soldiers. From this date emigration to this area became popular. The 1823 colonization scheme was directed towards the South of Ireland. The arrangements were carried out by Peter Robinson, a Canadian. He came to Ireland and selected his own followers from the disturbed areas in Co. Cork. They were given a free passage, a parcel of land, and other benefits. It is a measure of the success of this scheme that after three years it was reckoned that 120 out of the 132 families were still on their farms.

All this gave a considerable impetus to emigration. Thomas Odell of Limerick stated before the Select Committee on emigration from the United Kingdom in 1825 that the class of emigrants which were selected by Robinson in 1823 were paupers, and that so great was the desire to emigrate that over 2,000 applicants had to be turned away at Charleville, Co. Cork.

To arrive at reasonably accurate statistics for emigration for the early period is not possible. The first of the Passenger Acts in 1803, which was primarily aimed at rectifying the over-crowding then prevalent on ships and the regulation of food supplies, did not improve matters from the statistics point of view, for now in an attempt to evade these new regulations numerous surreptitious sailings took place. There were further attempts to improve this state of affairs in the Passenger Acts of 1823 and 1825 when the inclusion of a surgeon was required only when a hundred or more passengers embarked. (3) Conditions aboard were often deplorable and there was much need for rectifying them by legislation. The sailing time to the U.S.A. took up to ten weeks and the fare was about £6. For the voyage to Canada it was somewhat less.

Here we may note that the first steam vessel to cross the Atlantic was the Royal William, from Canada to England, August 18 - September 12, 1833. The first Cunard steamboat made its appearance in July 1840 and the first screw propelled vessel, The Globe, in December, 1850. From this date a new age in transatlantic shipping emerged and the days of the "coffin ships" were soon forgotten.

There are no official records for emigration from Ireland to North America prior to 1815. In that year the total figure from the United Kingdom was 1,889. Our sources for the history of emigration in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries are chiefly government reports and papers. The first of these to be published was the Report of the Select Committee on Emigration from the United Kingdom, 1826. This had its origins in the series of debates on the subject which began in parliament in 1820. The bulk of the evidence before this Committee favoured emigration as an immediate measure of relief. The Devon Commission of 1845 which had been set up to enquire into the system of land tenure then prevalent in Ireland also favoured emigration to relieve distress.

To understand the causes that led to the great exodus that reduced the country's population by more than two and a half millions a few years after the Great Famine we must first look at the living conditions of these people in Ireland whose numbers had grown from 4,206,602 in 1791 to 8,175,124 in 1841. For many of them the potatoe was the staple diet. It has been described as the most potent factor that has ever influenced the flow of emigration. A half acre of potatoes provided sufficient food for a whole year for a family of six, and if potatoes had to be purchased they cost about Id. per stone. (14 lbs.). This tuber provided in itself a full healthy diet, and for a period of the Winter and Spring, in many cases it was the only diet available. Couples who thought only in terms of a few roods and a shared hovel married at an early age, and raised families in miserable conditions. Bishop Doyle of Kildare and Leighlin in his submission to the 1825 Committee gives a harrowing picture of these people: "But now this very depression and their extreme poverty throws them together like so many savages in a wood. It is a frightful state of society. It fills me with so much pain and horror that I have frequently prayed to God, if it were ever his will, rather to take me out of this life than leave me to witness such evils, if they were to continue. They are beyond the endurance of human nature.

Bishop Doyle warned of the danger of the complete failure of the potatoe crop, and indeed there had been some partial failures before 1845. He favoured emigration as an ameliorating measure. So, also, did Mr. Spring Rice (later Lord Monteagle), who speaking on the subject before the same Committee summed up his attitude and the attitude of the whole community in one terse statement: "Give us but the means and half the country will go." But the means were not provided and the country moved closer to the edge of the precipice.

Before proceeding to discuss the great emigration consequent upon the Great Famine let us consider the position prior to that event and see how the Irish who settled in North America had fared. Adams (4) tells us that 341,000 left Ireland for North America during the period 1827-37. These he divides into three categories: 160,000 who went to Quebec; 114,000 to the United States; and 65,000 to New Brunswick. Religion, he tells us, did not decide the immediate destiny of these emigrants, but it did influence their eventual home in Canada, for they did tend to move eventually into communities together. The 44,000 who remained in Lower Canada were almost all Catholics. who came from Southern Ireland

In the 1830's there was a great increase in the Liverpool-New York traffic. This makes it extremely difficult to arrive at anything like exact emigration statistics, as many Irish sailed from Liverpool. There is a considerable difference, for instance, between the figures given by Adams and those compiled by the Commission on Emigration (Ireland), 1948 - 54 (1955). For the period 1831 - 40 Adams tells us that 393,410 had gone to North America, and for the period 1840 - 45 this figure was 233,253. This jumped to 105,912 in 1846 from over 74,000 the previous year.

(those who went to America)

Unfortunately these did not always integrate peacefully like the Scotch-Irish who formed the bulk of the Irish emigration until 1822. It was the Irish Catholic emigrants who aroused opposition, and from about 1831 to 1860 they were involved in much labour trouble. This period of Twenty-six County emigration was not welcomed, and because of the constant labour strife it must be admitted that the short term results were not altogether beneficial to the country of adoption. However there were some benefits. The Education Act of 1831 gave a great impetus to the English language in Ireland and raised the general standard of education in the country. This was of immense advantage to the Irish emigrants and gave them a decided advantage over other emigrants from the Continent. Hansen (5) in his detailed study of the Atlantic migration tells us that from 1780 to 1875 the English language served the Irish emigrants well, and it is indeed likely that it also contributed in some small measure to the supremacy of the English language referred to by Hansen. left new Irish expressions which are now part of our vocabulary.

Irish emigration to North America for the period of the Great Famine, beginning with 1845, is so well documented that I do not propose to dwell on it to any great extent. As a centenary commemoration of that horrifying event, R.D. Edwards and T.D. Williams, both professors of history in University College, Dublin, edited a collection of contributions by Irish scholars on the Great Famine. (6) In this work Professor Oliver Mac Donagh writes on Irish emigration to the United States of America and the British colonies during the famine years. When the great exodus began in 1846 almost every emigrant confided that it was the failure of the potatoe crop that had driven him away. With this failure panic set in in the face of famine and death. Isaac Butt, founder and leader of the Home Rule movement, wrote: (7) "It is difficult to trace this history without indignation. We can understand the conduct of the coroner's jury who, in days when inquests were held in Ireland upon the bodies of men found dead upon the highway, returned upon the body of a man who died of starvation while toiling at the public works and fell dead of exhaustion with the implements of labour in his hands, a verdict of murder against the ministers who had neglected the first responsibility of government."

The Quarter Acre clause of the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1847 refused relief if the starving applicant possessed more than a quarter acre of land. This was one of the most effective aids to ejectment that could have been devised. When in 1847 it became clear that the government would not give any worthwhile assistance in the country's crisis, some landlords set about aiding emigration. Colonel Wandesforde assisted more than 8,000 persons from Castlecomer (Co. Kilkenny) to emigrate to Canada.

Homer L. Clakin in a very fine article (8) describes those records on Irish immigration from Ireland which are in the U.S. National Archives in Washington. Here are to be found passenger lists for the ports of New York (1820 - 1919), Boston (1883 -99), Baltimore (1829 - 1919), New Orleans (1820 - 97), Philadelphia (1835 -99), as well as copies of lists for a number of other Atlantic and Gulf ports (1820 - 1883). These passenger lists give the name, age, and sex of all passengers and the country from which they came. There is also a list of immigrants entering all the ports for 1819 - 20. Other useful information pertaining to the passengers is given, such as their occupation. And there are case files and correspondence concerning individual Irish immigrants, the condition of the ships etc.

In Manuscript sources for the history of Irish civilization (9) there are more than ninety entries representing rolls of microfilms of the passenger lists in the National Archives in Washington covering Irish immigrants. These microfilms in the National Library of Ireland are for passenger lists for those arriving at the port of New York 1820 - 60. In this work we also find listed estate papers which give much information on emigration to North America, such as the emigration books for the estate of the Earl of Fitzwilliam in Co. Wicklow, giving particulars of emigrating families.

A thesis for a doctorate degree by G.R.C. Kemp entitled The Irish emigration to North America in the second half of the nineteenth century is in the Library of the Trinity College, Dublin and adds much to the literature on the subject. Probably, a more important aspect of this subject is the records in Ireland of those families who emigrated, but as this comes within the scope of Miss Margaret Griffith's paper I do not propose to deal with it here. But I am familiar with the type of query that comes from the Americans of Irish descent, and have helped many of them to trace their Irish ancestry.

Other interesting figures for emigration from Ireland to North America for the period 1825 - 45 are given by Adams (10) and by Johnson (11). The heaviest exodus from Ireland to North America was experienced in 1852 (249,738) and the lowest in 1918, the last year of the war (180). In 1922, the first of the Irish Free State, the number from the new state was 21,000. In 1952 the figure was 3,195. A new series of statistics was begun in 1924 for emigration. This was derived from passenger manifests and Board of Trade returns.

In this paper I have confined myself mainly to the causes of emigration, given statistics and their sources. It has not been possible for reasons of time and space to do more than touch on the settlement of the Irish in North America and their influence on the life of their countries of adoption or on the influence of these emigrants on their home country, to which they maintained a deep attachment, especially from the mid-nineteenth century. Schrier (12) refers to this two-way influence as "the flowing tide", and "the return tide".

As well as the standard books, such as those I have already mentioned, parliamentary papers, reports of select committees, census reports, and national archive papers on emigration, there is one other work on the subject to which I wish to draw particular attention. This is the Report of the Commission on Emigration (Ireland) 1948 - 54, 1955. This, as well as tracing the history of emigration from Ireland, gives statistical tables showing the emigration to the U.S.A. and Canada from 1825 to 1952. (13) The early figures (1825 to 1832 and 1835) are taken from the Reports of the Registrar of Shipping; those for 1837 from the Report of the Agent-General for Emigration from the United Kingdom; those for 1833, 1834, 1836 and 1838 to 1840 from the Reports of the Census Commissioners, Ireland, 1841; those for 1841 to 1872 from the Reports of Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners; those for 1873 to 1925 from Board of Trade returns, augmented for the years 1923, 1924 and 1925 by returns of the Irish Statistics Office.

Up to 1841 a figure representing two thirds of all who sailed from Liverpool for overseas destinations is added to the totals recorded for Irish ports.

A note to table 93 tells us that in the 85 years 1841 - 1925 nearly 4¾ million Irish people went to the United States of America and 670,000 to Canada. In the Census of the U.S.A. in 1940 the number of people described as of Irish origin was 2,788,187 which was 2½% of the population. Of this figure, 678,447 were born in Ireland (572,031 in the Twenty-Six Counties and 106,416 in the Six Counties).

For the period 1876 - 1921 the numbers who went from the Twenty-Six Counties were 1,315,708 to the U.S.A. and 43,432 to Canada. After 1921 there was a break in the statistical records, and while a count of overseas emigration from the Twenty-Six Counties began again in 1924, it was not until the outbreak of war in 1939, when a system of travel permits was introduced, that detailed statistics bearing on total emigration were again compiled. From then until 1952 the statistics of these travel permits are the source of information.

R.C. Geary and M.D. McCarthy of the Irish Statistics Office state (14) that "it has been estimated that in the sixty-five years before the Famine, emigration from All Ireland was 1¾ million, equivalent to 27,000 per annum, which is of the same order of magnitude as emigration in recent years. A century and a half ago, however, this emigration was from a much larger total population, and was not so great as to prevent a substantial increase in population. Since the Famine, net emigration from All Ireland has amounted to about 6 million and from the Twenty-Six Counties to 5 million."

But the influence goes even further than that exerted on the political and economic life on both sides of the Atlantic; it meant more than sending home remittances to the needy families in Ireland. "Emigration", writes Chrier, "has been so persistent a phenomenon in modern Irish history that its influence has penetrated areas of Irish life which are not susceptible of measurement by charts or columns of statistics." Another American, William V. Shannon, (15) also sets out the story of the contribution the Irish have made in every field in the United States "from religion to prize-fighting". A.P. Mann (16) writing on the Irish in New York in the early eighteen-sixties tells us that of the city's 805,651 population more than a quarter were Irish, making this the largest Irish city in the world. The limited bibliography which I have appended will to some degree indicate the coverage on all aspects of the subject.

Tithe applotment books

CONTENTS

These applotment books provide a census of land owners and a list of tenants for parishes in Northern Ireland. The Church of Ireland collected tithes which were based on property value or yearly production. They were said to be voluntary and could be paid in kind.

Variant spellings for parish names occur frequently.
