INTRODUCTION

During the nineteenth-century, almost 85,000 Mormon emigrants crossed the oceans to America. Motivated by the doctrine of gathering, they were drawn to the Great Basin in droves. The missionaries who converted them also accompanied them on their ocean voyages and across the continent.

While compiling a source guide to Mormon pioneer companies crossing the plains, we realized that a source guide to ocean narratives might also be valued by family researchers and historians. Past experience in providing reference assistance to researchers and historians dictated the focus of this source guide. Narratives of ocean travel and shipboard life of Mormon emigrants and missionaries found in published and unpublished letters, reports, and journals were included. These were further limited to primary accounts of voyages across the Pacific and Atlantic Ocean to America. Accounts of voyages in large organized companies, small groups, or single Mormon individuals were included. Accounts of the ocean travels of Mormons departing from American ports to other countries were not included in this guide. River travel narratives were also not included. A cutoff date of 1890 was established for this finding aid because the Church changed its gathering policy about that time. According to emigration historian Marjorie Newton, "from about 1890, the First Presidency began to look at the prospects of establishing a worldwide church, with permanent overseas missions and branches. Missionaries were urged to encourage their converts to remain in their native lands and build up the Church there." [BYU Studies 27:2 (Spring 1987) p. 76] Consult the "European Emigration Card Index" (also called the "Crossing the Ocean Index") in order to find the name of the ship on which an emigrant traveled. As its title implies, the "European Emigration Card Index" does not contain information about those who traveled across the Pacific Ocean to America. However, it is fairly complete for the nineteenth century period beginning in 1849, having been compiled from rosters and records maintained in the various European missions. Copies of this index reside in both the Historical Department and Family History Library.

The Historical Department was the primary repository from which sources were identified and location pinpointed for this guide. Collections at the LDS Church Family History Library, Utah State Historical Society, Brigham Young University Harold B. Lee Library (Special Collections and Archives), Utah State University Merrill Library (Special Collections), and University of Utah Marriott Library (Special Collections) were also surveyed. However many of the sources contained herein may also be found in other libraries and archives, both in and outside Utah. Sources which were found in the Historical Department are identified as to their general location at the end of each reference: (A) refers to Archives Reading Room and (L) refers to Church Library. The catalogs in those respective areas must be consulted to obtain the call numbers to locate or request the desired documents. Some Historical Department call numbers are supplied to clarify the identification of selected sources, e.g., documents authored by Scandinavians with common names. Please recognize that call numbers are subject to change and the Historical Department catalogs should be consulted to identify the call number in order to request an item. Sources located in the LDS Church Family History Library (formerly the Genealogical Library) are identified by the abbreviation "FHL." Page numbers in this guide refer to the exact pages in the text (in both paginated manuscript and published sources) covering the ocean voyage experience. The guide is arranged alphabetically by ship name.

CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF ORGANIZED MORMON SHIP COMPANIES

[Note: The emphasis in this listing, copied from the Deseret News 1977 Church Almanac, is ships which traveled from Europe to America, although this source guide includes all narratives of Mormon ship travel to America. This list is here included for reference.]
